Principal Need Is to Operate on Problems

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times
ROME, June 23—Italian Communist Party officials said today they were ready to forgo bids for immediate seats in cabinet in return for a more limited role in developing senior party official said in an interview that the Communists had not given up on a long-range goal of joining the Christian Democrats and other parties in a coalition government.

During the election campaign the Communist Party pressed the need for a Government of "national unity" of parties, except the neo-fascists. It was clear from the comments today that the Communist Party was prepared to be less at present.

"Our policy is not all or nothing," said the senior party official. "The key thing is to work together and give a chance to work out its economic problems and stabilize the minimum working conditions program to do all these things and more."

Anonymity Requested
An official said he did not want to be named because the Communist Party leadership is meeting tonight and tomorrow, had not yet made formal announcements.

Meanwhile, Enrico Berlinguer, the party's leader, urged the post-election strategy of moderation in an interview published in Italian newspapers today. He said any people had viewed the party's proposal for seats in Cabinet as an "ambiguity" going into the Government.

"We made that proposal in the interests of the country," he said. "The vote and our great success confirmed it. But there is no hurry in the Communist Party. We want to see what proposals are put forth by other parties and then we will decide."

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Jimmy Carter pledged himself yesterday to an open foreign policy that would encourage a more active participation by other democracies in the resolution of international problems.

"The time has come for a new architectural effort," he said in an address before the Foreign Policy Association here, "with a growing cooperation among the industrial democracies its cornerstone, and with peace and justice its constant goals."

In the third major speech on global affairs of his campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination, the 51-year-old former Governor of Georgia reiterated many of the themes he has sounded in the past, criticizing the Ford Administration's foreign policies as "secretive" and "amoral," and promising a new diplomatic posture that he said would reflect "the decency and generosity and common sense of our people."

Without mentioning Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Mr. Carter criticized him as a "Lone Ranger" caught up in a "one-man policy of international adventure"—perhaps a foreshadowing of the anti-Administration theme he would sound in the election campaign if Mr. Ford should become the Republican candidate.

Now apparently assured of his own party's nomination, Mr. Carter seemed at ease before the more than 2,000 people who crowded into the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to hear him. In his speech and later remarks, Mr. Carter did the following:

• Pledged to retain United States control over the Panama Canal, but with "open and continued negotiations [with Panama] and the sharing of sovereignty and control, recognizing their rights in that respect."
• Recommended assistance to Italy from Western Europe and the United States to help solve political problems that he attributed to an "underlying social malaise."
• Suggested an emulation of Japan's policy of full diplomatic relations with China and strong trade relations with

House Reforms Approved By Democrats After Fight

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 23—The House Democrats passed tonight the bulk of the package of reform proposals that would substantially change the chamber's administrative operations, but only after more than seven hours of bitter fighting between opposing factions.

In a rare night session of the House Democratic Caucus that lasted more than four hours, the Democratic leadership won six closely contested votes that preserved the spirit, if not the total package, of reform proposals intended both to prevent future abuses and enhance the re-election prospects of many newly elected Democrats.

The 287 members of the Democratic Caucus, meeting on the House floor with 20 Republicans looking on from the galleries, argued—accompanied at times by shouts and catcalls —over the minute details of proposals that would make substantial changes in the administrative operations of the chamber, including its payroll, expense accounts and necessity of records to the public.

Representative Ray J. Madden of Indiana, who at 85 years of age is the senior member of the House, summed up the majority attitude.

"The Republicans are lambasting us, calling the scandal here another Watergate," Mr. Madden declared in a voice choked with emotion. "It's their political strategy to use this issue to take the public's mind off Watergate."

BEACH POLLUTION ON L.I. LAID TO CITY

Some of the Sewage Traced

Special to The New York Times

POINT LOOKOUT, L. I., June 23—A number of public officials today began pointing to New York City as the major source of raw sewage that has washed up on Long Island shores in recent weeks.

Governor Carey tonight declared Nassau and Suffolk Counties a "disaster" area, making them eligible for state funds to pay for the damage and the ongoing clean-up. A few beaches were open in Suffolk today, while others in both counties may be ready by the weekend.

"Some of it is coming out of the harbor, there's no doubt," said Eric Outwater, deputy regional administrator for Region II of the Federal Environmental Protection Agency, referring to the bulk of "floatables" that had been found from Atlantic Beach to the Hamptons.

NORTHEAST STATES JOIN UNDER CAREY IN ECONOMIC PACT

7 Officials Pledge to Lobby for U.S. Aid and to Plan Growth Cooperatively

By MICHAEL STERNE

Governors and representatives of seven northeastern states met in New York City yesterday under the chairmanship of Governor Carey and formed a regional coalition to fight for the regeneration of their recession-ravaged economies.

Citing the common problems of high unemployment, obsolete transportation systems, energy shortages, slow economic development and high living costs, they pledged to form a united front to lobby in Washington for Federal policies favorable to the Northeast.

They also agreed to cooperate in joint economic planning to identify and attract industries that could operate profitably in the region and to form an economic development corporation that would raise capital for new industrial and commercial enterprises.

National Commitment Asked Represented at the meeting, besides New York State, were New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Vermont and Rhode Island.

"As the nation in the past recognized the development needs of the Western frontiers, and the rural South, so now the nation must acknowledge a similar commitment to the older, yet still vibrant Northeast," they said in a joint statement.

At a news conference following the meeting, which was held in Governor Carey's offices at 56th Street and Avenue of the Americas, Mr. Carey said the subject of job piracy and other forms of intraregional competition had not come up.

"Common Problems"
"What we are trying to emphasize here is that we have common problems, and that if we won't cooperate to solve them, we are all going to be hurt," he said.

Earlier this year Mr. Carey had condemned the efforts of neighboring states to lure away New York companies, but yesterday, basking in the friendliness and cooperation apparent at the meeting, he seemed eager to avoid critical remarks.

Teamster Pension Funds Found Unaccounted For

Labor Department Is Said to Estimate Sum at Hundreds of Millions and May Put Federal Trustees in Charge

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 23—The sources said, "Of the many charges leveled against the fund," said one person in a position to know, "they have substantiated some."

Trusteeship would mean removing the eight union trustees and eight management trustees from control of the fund, sources close to the investigation said today.

In addition, the investigators are amassing evidence for possible indictments against some of the 16 present trustees of the $1.4 billion pension fund for the way that they handled the money, although a Labor Department source said that the indictments were six to nine months away.

The investigators, who declined all requests for information about what they had found, have reportedly turned up many questionable loans and procedures, including kickbacks to pension fund trustees.

Provenzano Indicted With Teamster Aide In '61 Union Killing

F.B.I.-C.I.A. LAXITY

By NICHOLAS GAGE

Anthony Provenzano and Salvatore Briguglio, who have been questioned about the disappearance of James R. Hoffa, were indicted yesterday with two other men on charges of kidnapping and murdering a New Jersey teamsters' union official in 1961.

Federal officials said that the indictment of the two in the murder of Anthony Castellino, secretary-treasurer of Local 560 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, was not related to the disappearance last July of Mr. Hoffa, the former resident of the union.

F.B.I. BURGLARIES SAID TO BE FOCUS OF MAJOR INQUIRY

Justice Dept.'s Nationwide Investigation May Affect Hundreds of Agents

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 23—The Department of Justice is conducting a nationwide investigation of alleged illegal burglaries since 1971 by the Federal Bureau of Investigation that could ultimately involve hundreds of agents and officials of the bureau's intelligence division, according to well-placed F.B.I. sources.

At least a dozen agents, including an assistant director of the bureau, have retained private legal counsel because of the investigation. The inquiry is the broadest criminal investigation of the F.B.I. ever conducted, and one key agent said that it could result in changes in the fabric of the bureau "as it now exists."

The burglaries under investigation were allegedly performed by agents against organizations and individuals of the New Left, particularly members or supporters of the militant Weatherman organization, according to well-placed bureau sources.

Special Team Formed
The investigation is being conducted by William L. Gardner, chief of the criminal section of the civil rights division of the Department of Justice. He is assisted by a special team of F.B.I. men under the direction of Richard Ash, the head of the bureau's identification division.

The inquiry was apparently begun after a civil suit brought against the F.B.I. and its officials by the Socialist Worker Party uncovered documents that indicated that surreptitious entries of the homes and offices of officials of the left had been made after 1971.

What has made the timing a sensitive factor is that the F.B.I. told the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence activities and the Ford Administration that it had no record of using burglary in domestic cases after 1966 when its director, the late J. Edgar Hoover, ordered the practice halted.

Clarence M. Kelley, the current director of the bureau, has consistently stated that his practice ended in 1966.

Secret Files Involved
According to bureau sources the current investigation has delved into heretofore secret files maintained in the 59 F.B.I. field offices, including the file of the special agent in charge and a "do not file" file. These files were not searched when the Senate committee made its investigation last year and have no counterpart in Washington.

South Africans Reflect on Causes of Rioting and on the Country's Future

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

PRETORIA, South Africa, June 23—In the aftermath of a week of riots by blacks, attention has turned to the question of what started them and what they may portend for the future of a racially divided country that is ruled by its white minority.

Since the violence first tore through the black townships around Johannesburg and spread on Monday to the black enclaves around Pretoria, the Government has presented it as the product of incitement.

Since the outbreak of the violence, the Government has presented it as the product of incitement by what Prime Minister John Vorster, in a television address, alluded to as "certain persons and organizations." Mr. Vorster suggested that the unidentified agitators had fanned the trouble in an attempt to sabotage his meeting in West Germany with support the Government's Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, which began today. Liberals in both the white and black communities have appealed to the Government not to dismiss the rioting as the product of a lunatic fringe.

As these considerations occupied many South Africans, only one incident was reported today, and it was minor compared with those that occurred at Johannesburg, 95 miles south of Johannesburg, black students stoned a liquor store and burned a gasoline station. A judicial inquiry into the rioting, which began as a protest by black students in Soweto, southwest of Johannesburg, against an instruction in Afrikaans language, is to be conducted by Petrus Cilie, a judge president of the Transvaal. Presumably he will ask officials to furnish evidence to he had heard the trouble had been started by "people from Johannesburg."

Outsiders trying to reconstruct the week of violence are left with circumstantial evidence that is vague and unconvincing.

Blacks who contend that they kept a keen eye on the students' protest in Soweto say that it was a spontaneous expression of resentment against the regulation requiring them to study some subjects in Afrikaans.

The march of 10,000 students that ended with a volley of police bullets last week was also spontaneous, these sources say.

In a country where harsh security laws exist side by side with a press that is remarkably candid in its reporting of events embarrassing to the Government, word of disorder travels fast.

By nightfall there can have been few of the country's five million urban blacks who did not know what was happening in Soweto. Nor could they fail to recognize that mob attacks on Government buildings and sustained police gunfire on the rioters were unparalleled in the history of apartheid.

The possibility of a spontaneous chain reaction was recognized by the Government, which immediately appealed for calm in black communities elsewhere.

For nearly 48 hours, until dawn on Friday, the appeal seemed to have worked. Nearly a dozen black townships around Johannesburg, many of them poorer even than Soweto, remained peaceful until the trouble spread to the Pretoria area.

Rhodesian Government Split on Reform

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, June 23—Proposals for major racial reforms in Rhodesia that affect voting, land ownership and social relations among blacks and whites have divided Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Government and stirred a major controversy here.

The proposals by an official Government commission have met with the qualified approval of Mr. Smith and split the ruling Rhodesian Front Party down the middle. As a result, Mr. Smith now finds his position challenged from within for the first time since he came to power in 1964 on a hard-line white supremacist platform.

Black nationalists, insisting on majority rule, have brushed aside the proposals and have said, in effect, that they offer too little and come too late.

"Africans are no longer particularly concerned about sharing the same table with a white man in a restaurant but with the change of the whole political system," said Ronald Sandomba, a black member of Parliament.

But white moderates say that the proposals are the first significant official steps in years to deal with black grievances, and that Mr. Smith has gone out on a limb to support the proposals. Mr. Smith, who has been unyielding on racial reform, has come under strong pressures from neighboring South Africa to seek accommodation with the black majority.

The reforms were advanced by an 11-member commission, including five blacks, appointed by the Government last September to look into ways of improving race relations in Rhodesia, a nation of six million blacks and only 270,000 whites.

The proposals will be debated in Parliament in the next few weeks, when the extent of the opposition to Mr. Smith will emerge. But Mr. Smith's own party chairman, Des Frost, has said that the report was "totally contrary to the principles of the Rhodesian Front." Other whites have termed it "a monstrous injustice to the white community" and "betrayal."

The 115-page report surprised many white Rhodesians, who had expected relatively traditional views. One of its most controversial proposals concerned the Land Tenure Act, under which the country is about evenly divided between white areas and black areas, although there are about 22 blacks for every white.

"We consider the time has come to abandon the two main land classifications—the European area and the African area," the report says.

Although European, or white, residential land should remain exclusively segregated, the report said that urban commercial and industrial land should be available to all races and that blacks should be permitted to set up as farmers in areas now reserved for whites.

On hotels and restaurants, the commission proposed that after two years it would be unlawful in urban areas to have guests on racial grounds.

The commission also proposed a ban on drinking by blacks in city bars after 7 P.M.

Perhaps the most far-reaching recommendation involved the abolition of separate black and white voter rolls that have served effectively to maintain white dominance in the Legislature. The commission said: "In our considered view the relationship between the races would be improved if there were a return to the common roll."

At present the black and white voters' lists are based on separate income and property qualifications. It is stipulated, however, that the Legislature should be comprised of 50 whites and 16 blacks, half of them elected in a direct vote and the others by tribal chiefs and headmen.

The commission avoided the issue of what qualifications would be needed to vote—and maintained that universal franchise was out of the question.

U.S. Rejects Rhodesian Charge

WASHINGTON, June 23 (AP)—The State Department today rejected as "patently ridiculous" a Rhodesian Government charge that the United States and Britain were promoting guerrilla incursions into Rhodesia from Mozambique.

"The reason for the present increase in fighting in Rhodesia is the continued refusal of the white minority regime there to move toward establishment of a truly representative Government," a State Department spokesman, Frederick Brown, said.

Rhodesia's President, John J. Wrathall, said in a speech at the opening of Parliament yesterday that black terrorists were being encouraged by the attitude of the British and American Governments.

Wrathall said the two countries "hope to ward off further penetration of southern Africa by seeking an early handover of black rule in Rhodesia."

At a news conference, Mr. Brown said: "I would just add that far from abetting violence, our policy is intended to advance a peaceful resolution of the Rhodesian problem through a negotiated settlement leading to majority rule with protection of minority rights."

VORSTER FOE SEES 'MORE FLASHPOINTS'

PHILADELPHIA, June 23 (AP)—A liberal member of the South African Parliament predicted today that "more flashpoints of violence" will erupt within five years if her Government "doesn't take steps to eliminate the most flagrant types of racial discrimination."

Helen Suzman, a supporter of equal rights for the blacks, who outnumber South African whites 5 to 1, was in Philadelphia to accept a Civil Liberties Medal from the American Jewish Committee.

Mrs. Suzman says she believes the Government will drop the required use of the Afrikaans language in schools, the issue that ignited last week's rioting near Johannesburg.

"It is not the kind of issue that should be allowed to ignite such violence," she said.

The legislator said she doubted the riots could spark a revolution.

"That is a very far-fetched idea," she said, but she added "that may come in time."

Canadian Minister Doubts Early End of Airline Strike

OTTAWA, June 23 (Reuters)—Transport Minister Otto Lang, labeling a pilots' strike as "blackmail," said today that he saw little hope of an early end to the work stoppage that has forced Canada's two international carriers to suspend services and to set a Friday deadline for laying off 18,500 employees.

Lisbon Premier Stricken In Presidential Campaign

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, June 23—The Prime Minister of Portugal, José Pinheiro de Azevedo, suffered a severe heart attack today while he was campaigning for the presidency.

He was unconscious, his heart had stopped beating and he was no longer breathing when he arrived at a hospital in Oporto. Doctors succeeded in reviving his heart by massage.

According to the latest medical bulletin, the Prime Minister was still unconscious, and doctors withheld any clinical prognosis.

Should 59-year-old admiral die before next Sunday's election without having signed a formal withdrawal from the race, the vote for Portuguese president, according to constitutional law, will have to be postponed.

Admiral Pinheiro de Azevedo has been waging an aggressive campaign as an independent candidate against the favorite in the presidential race, General António Ramalho Eanes, the northern army chief of staff.

The 41-year-old general, who has expressed a strong commitment to maintain law and order, has the backing of the country's largest political parties.

The last public opinion poll, published on June 9, saw him getting 33 percent of the vote.

Prime Minister Pinheiro de Azevedo, who ran largely on his popular appeal, was given 14 percent of the vote by the poll. Close behind was the radical leftist candidate, Maj. Diogo Saraiva de Carvalho, with 11 percent, while the Communist Party's candidate, Octavio Pato, had 3 percent.

During the presidential campaign, which opened June 12, Admiral Pinheiro de Azevedo was said to have lost some of his popularity because of his sharp tongue. Nevertheless, political circles still gave him an outside chance of winning if there were a runoff election against General Eanes because the admiral would probably get the Communist and extreme-left vote in a second round.

The admiral's campaign committee announced after his heart attack that he would withdraw from the race.

The national election board expressed "the greatest consternation" over the Prime Minister's state of health but stressed that "the temporary incapacity of a candidate does not entirely with the performance of the Federal Government's intelligence agencies, domestic and foreign, with regard to the investigation of the Kennedy assassination.

F.B.I. and C.I.A. Found Lax on Kennedy

It said that the C.I.A. leadership had ignored the possibility of a connection between its own assassination attempts against Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba and the murder of President Kennedy.

Further, it accused the C.I.A. of having deceived the investigatory commission headed by Chief Justice Earl Warren about its knowledge of facts relating to the assassination.

Specifically, the report said that Allen W. Dulles, Director of Central Intelligence until the spring of 1962, had never told the Warren Commission of his knowledge of previous assassination plots against Prime Minister Castro, which could have provoked Cuban retaliatory actions.

Oswald's Role

With regard to the role of Lee Harvey Oswald, who is generally held to have been the lone assassin of President Kennedy, the report says:

"Senior C.I.A. officials should have realized that their agency was not utilizing its full capability to investigate Oswald's pro-Castro and anti-Castro connections. They should have realized that C.I.A. operations against Cuba, particularly operations involving the assassination of Castro, needed to be considered in the investigation. Yet they directed their subordinates to conduct an investigation without telling them of these vital facts."

As for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the report said that its Director, the late J. Edgar Hoover, had been so preoccupied with what he described as a possible "smear" of the bureau in connection with Oswald that he had neglected to call for a broad and unprejudiced inquiry into the murder.

Pressure on Hoover Cited

After noting that Mr. Hoover had been "pressured by higher Government officials" to conclude the F.B.I. investigation swiftly, the report said:

"The F.B.I. conducted its investigation in an atmosphere of concern among senior bureau officials that it would be criticized and its reputation tarnished. Rather than addressing its investigation to all significant circumstances, including all possibilities of conspiracy, the F.B.I. investigation focused narrowly on Lee Harvey Oswald."

As a result of the C.I.A. and F.B.I. deficiencies, the Senate report asserted, the Warren Commission was unable to perform a thorough investigation or to reach definitive conclusions.

The report said it was "still unclear" why both agencies had failed to fulfill their duties, but suggested as motives "concern with public reputation, problems of coordination between agencies, possible bureaucratic failure and embarrassment, and extreme compartmentation of knowledge of sensitive operations."

Failure to Follow Leads

As a result of the shortcomings, the report went on, two important leads on a possible involvement of persons other than Oswald went unpursued.

The first lead, it said, concerned an unidentified passenger who boarded a Cuban Airlines flight from Mexico City to Cuba at 10:30 P.M. Dec. 1, 1963, nine days after the murder in Dallas. The C.I.A. report at the time noted that the flight had been delayed to pick up the stranger, who did not go through Mexican customs and who rode in the cockpit of the airliner. There was no follow-up by the C.I.A., the report said.

The second lead cited in the report involved a Cuban-American who crossed from Texas to Mexico on Nov. 23, 1963, the day after the murder, and went on to Cuba. This person

TIONS JOLT ANESE PARTY

Manager Members Say Plan to Secede and Form a New Grouping

DREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

On June 23—in a move that is politically far-reaching in significance, half a dozen members of Parliament in the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party have decided to secede from the party to form a new political grouping.

The move, taken because of their dissatisfaction with the traditional seniority system of factional politics, is highly unusual in a conservative party, which has been the dominant force in Japan since the 1955 election of the Liberal and Democratic Parties.

At the moment the six, led by Kono, a 38-year-old member of Parliament, represent a tiny minority of the party's 274 members.

Party Elders Shocked

The news of their threatened secession shocked party elders, most of them in their 70's, the move will not likely jeopardize the Democrats' majority.

The rebels' talk of "fresh blood" and "reform" represents a long-dissatisfied in the status quo politics have come to characterize the party's administration.

The joint political philosophy is still vague, but they talk of "modernizing" Japanese politics in Japan. Public support erodes so that an opposition party could achieve political control.

The reason has been the split. It is a gap between party members whose lives were shaped by the military of the 1930's and the ranks of younger politicians for whom war and economic times are plain.

The gaps have helped the growth in recent years of political study groups, meetings of members of Parliament whose similar interests and philosophies cross traditional factional lines of alliance.

Similar groupings also exist in the opposition political parties, which are the Social-Democratic, Socialists, Government and Communist.

GENERAL SAVING

Range Effects Weighed

Did the six men succeed in getting other members of the party to secede? Substantial votes at general elections and more support for their party, the long-range political effects and realignments this region's sole regional democracy could be expected.

It is just may be the beginning of a whole new political scene in Japan," a Western political observer said.

The Japanese have a proverb, "the nail that sticks up is the nail that gets hit." And the rebels—financial, political and social—have already begun to apply the six.

According to sources in the group, the die has been cast. "We have all written party resignations," said Kono, "and they will be filed in by Saturday."

Who They Are

The six are:

- Kono, a former business executive whose late father, Kono, was a member of Parliament who advocated creation of a second major conservative party.
- Nishio, a 39-year-old paper executive from Osaka whose father also served in the Parliament. This is his fourth term.
- Yamaguchi, age 35, is the third rebel who inherited his father's parliamentary seat. This is his third term.
- Kobayashi, 46, a former assistant political editor of the main newspaper now in its parliamentary term.
- Tagawa, 57, a five-member from Kanagawa Prefecture, the heavily industrial area just south of Tokyo.
- Arino, 59, a record company president in his term in the Parliament's house.

How System Works

Within the Liberal Democratic Party these men have been elected with a variety of factions, the virtually feudal politics around an elder politician who employs his political skills in intraparty bargaining and power struggles for cabinet and ultimately the party presidency.

Since the party controls 274 of the 491 lower house seats and 28 of the 252 upper house seats, the party presidency is the prime ministership.

Prime Minister Takeo Miki, 68, heads one of the Liberal Democratic factions. In consultations with party elders in December he named the party vice president, Saburo Shima, who is 78. Miki, Mr. Miki as a compromise candidate when other candidates blocked each other, there was no party vote.

Such backstage maneuverings in "smoke-filled tea houses" are a common complaint of the seceding members.

Christians in Beirut Reportedly Pressing Their Attacks

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 23—Beirut resounded to artillery, mortar and rocket fire today for a second day as right-wing Christian gunmen reportedly kept up their attacks on two Palestinian camps and a Moslem enclave in the predominantly Christian eastern neighborhoods.

The leftist-controlled Beirut radio charged that the Christians had massed large numbers of men and armored vehicles for the assaults, which seemed to center on the two refugee camps of Jisr el-Pasha and Tell Zaatar. The nearby Moslem enclave of Nabaa was also reported under attack.

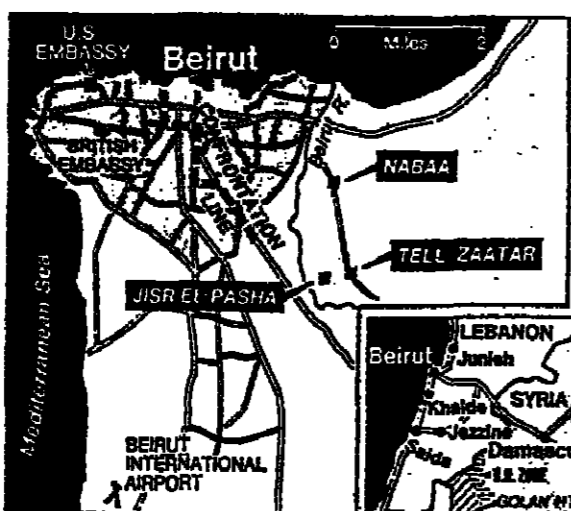

Artillerymen in predominantly Moslem western Beirut poured fire into the eastern neighborhoods in apparent efforts to slow the Christian advance.

Palestinian guerrilla officials said late in the afternoon that their men had repulsed the attacks on both refugee camps and had taken up new positions outside.

100 Believed Killed
Dependable casualty figures were unavailable since there is no governmental authority here, but one estimate was that 100 people had been killed overnight in shelling attacks and 150 wounded.

These reports came as Syrian and Egyptian Prime Ministers met in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, to discuss the disputes between their countries over the second Egyptian-Israeli disengagement accord on Sinai last fall and the Syrian military intervention in Lebanon.

As the fighting continued in the eastern neighborhoods, the airport in the southwest resumed its first commercial flight since it was closed June 7 when Syrian armor penetrated to the edges of the capital.

A Middle East Airlines plane from Athens landed at 4:20 P.M., and the line announced that it was resuming its service from Beirut.

The fighting in the east knocked out the one power line supplying the capital, and the city as well as the entire coastal region from Beirut north of Junieh, to Khaldé south of the airport were again without electricity.

In the downtown telephone headquarters, a generator burned out, and telephones worked fitfully during the day. Overseas lines were not working.

The centers of the latest fighting—Nabaa, Jisr el-Pasha and Tell Zaatar—have long tormented the Christian right, which in more than 14 months of civil war has gradually built a de facto state of its own from eastern Beirut to the port of Junieh and into the mountains to the east. Attempts last January to wipe out the militant enclaves led to the intervention of the Palestine Liberation Army.

It was not clear whether the Lebanese Christians actually hoped to take the heavily defended areas—or just use the attacks as a way of focusing Arab and world attention on the unresolved question of the Palestinian guerrilla movement in Lebanon.

The right-wing assaults overshadowed the unresolved questions of a cease-fire accord between Syria and the Palestinian guerrilla movement negotiated by the Libyan Prime Minister, Maj. Abdel Salam Jalloud, who was again in Beirut during the day.

The accord was said to provide for a staged withdrawal of Syrian troops from positions they held near Beirut on the main Damascus-Beirut highway and above the southern port town of Saida.

Prisoners Also an Issue
Another issue apparently holding up moves to carry out the accord was the question of prisoners taken by both sides following Syria's military advance into Lebanon in June 6.

One key prisoner is Brig. Gen. Mubashir Budeiri, the former commander of the Palestine Liberation Army. The officer, a member of the Syrian Baath Party, is a brother-in-law of Maj. Gen. Mustafa Tlas, the Syrian Defense Minister.

Yasir Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, issued an order relieving General Budeiri of his command and allowing him to return to the Syrian Army.

The order said that Mr. Arafat, who has been out of the country since the latest confrontation between the guerrillas and the Syrian Army, would have direct command of all Palestine Liberation Army units until a new chief was appointed.

General Reported Freed
BEIRUT, June 23 (Reuters)—General Budeiri has been handed over to Prime Minister Jalloud, according to the Voice of Palestine radio.

Europe's Communists Are Near Accord On Right to Establish Their Own Policies

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times
ROME, June 23—Communist parties of Eastern and Western Europe are near final agreement on a declaration of common principles that would give all Communist parties the right to establish their own policies and even the implicit right to criticize the Russians and each other, authorities sources said here today.
The declaration as it now stands, the sources said, eliminates all references to "proletarian internationalism," which had been a major Soviet demand, and even to "Marxist-Leninism."
A meeting of delegates is scheduled in East Berlin tomorrow and Friday to put finishing touches on the document and settle details for the conference, which has been under intermittent negotiation at Soviet request for over two years, mainly involving representatives of each party in charge of interparty relations. If there are no further hitches, an announcement is expected Friday, with the high-level conference to start Monday.
According to sources here, the latest draft of the document was worked out by the Russians and the Yugoslavs during a recent visit to Belgrade by Konstantin F. Katushev, a Soviet official responsible for relations with governing Communist parties.

For Communist parties that have been opposing what some call Soviet "hegemony," the declaration was said to represent a major reversal of Moscow's stand and that of its most loyal allies, such as the Czechoslovaks and the Bulgarians. The Italian, Spanish and, in the last year, the French Communist parties in the West, and the Yugoslav and Rumanian parties, had rejected Soviet efforts to proclaim the obligation of all Communists to recognize Moscow's "guiding role" in effect, to follow Moscow's line.
Soviet acceptance of their demands was considered by these parties a historic turning point in the history of Communism, an abandonment of Moscow's formal right to first loyalty, established by Stalin in the twenties.
For the Yugoslavs, particularly, well-informed sources here said, the Soviet signature on the new document will mean an endorsement of Marshal Tito's right to have taken the independent stand that provoked Stalin to expel him from the Cominform in 1948 and, in effect, will give the same right of dissidence to all European parties.

That would imply Soviet acceptance of the right of the Italian Communists to pursue their drive for "Eurocommunism," an effort to create a bloc of parties within Western Europe, and therefore in NATO, with policies at variance with those of Moscow and the Warsaw Pact countries.
There has been a long series of arguments on the details of the declaration that the conference will issue, the various parties insisting on the inclusion or omission of phrases of key importance to their stand. One of the last obstacles was a demand by the French Communists that the document include a denunciation of Western imperialism and the North Atlantic alliance. The French party has been taking an intensely nationalist stand of late, in its search for support among Gaullists critical of the way President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing has moved to improve relations with the United States.
The French dropped this demand after a Central Committee meeting in Paris yesterday, and there will be no such denunciation. Some observers in Rome believed, however, that this was merely a tactical maneuver by the Paris Communists to delay the conference until after the Italian elections.
A Western diplomat said there had been advanced preparations, including the issuance of visas and landing rights for a special aircraft, for an important Soviet party delegation to visit Rome and Paris for consultations with local Communist leaders two weeks ago. The trip, evidently in connection with the East Berlin negotiations was called off at the last minute, presumably because the Italian Communists wanted no visible links to the Russians as the election campaign here was drawing to a close.
The Soviet position in the negotiations has changed several times. In 1973, the Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev called for a world conference of Communist parties that would have been aimed at denouncing Peking. That proved impossible because too many parties refused to attend.
Then, the call was transformed into an appeal by the East Germans for a conference of all the European Communists, with the suggestion that world meetings might follow. Negotiations for the European meeting then began, with several parties imposing a ban on any attempt to attack or criticize the Chinese as the initial condition.
As the intermittent bargaining progressed, other demands were issued by the Italians, Spaniards, Yugoslavs and Rumanians that basically sought to limit Moscow's claim to leadership and its right to interfere in the affairs of other Communist parties.
By last October, the French had joined this group, the Russians had ceded several key points, and agreement seemed imminent. Mr. Brezhnev had indicated an urgent desire for the European Communist conference to take place after last summer's East-West European security session in Helsinki, and before the 24th Soviet Communist Party Congress in February.

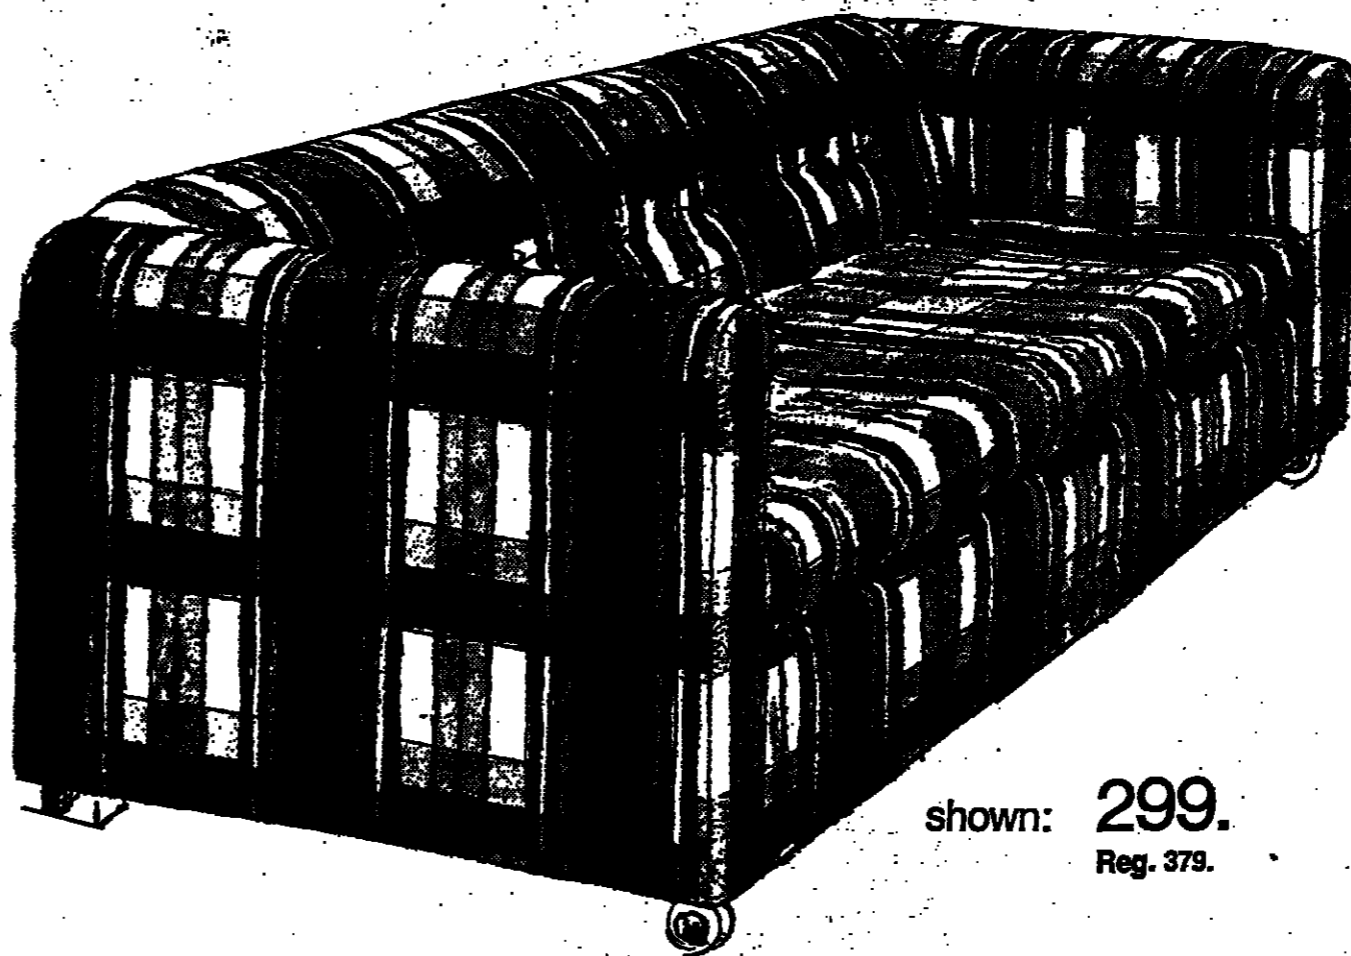

Italian Communists Soften Bid For Immediate Seats in Cabinet

following the elections last Sunday and Monday. The Christian Democrats would continue to govern, but would consult openly with the Communists on programs to deal with the economic crisis.
Many hurdles remain and the post-election talk is already coming as to what might emerge from many diplomats and politicians see few other possibilities for resolving the political deadlock.
In the elections, the Christian Democrats and the Communists both gained votes at the expense of smaller parties. The Christian Democrats won only 2 percentage points ahead of the Communists in regional and local elections last year, came out ahead this time by a margin of 5.1 percentage points in the voting for Senate seats and by 4.3 percentage points in the vote for the Chamber of Deputies.
By increasing their vote, the Communists picked up an important bloc of seats in the Chamber and strengthened their power to determine the fate of future Government and legislation. In the Chamber of Deputies, the final results showed that they gained 48 seats, one fewer than reported yesterday.
The Christian Democrats lost three seats in the 630-seat Chamber but still held 263 of the Communists' 227. If the Socialists, who hold 57 seats, agree to go into a coalition with the Christian Democrats, the two parties would have a majority.
The Socialists, however, have not made up their minds. Some in the party are against rejoining the Christian Democrats in a center-left coalition. Others insist that the price for their support should be the entry of the Communists into the Government.
Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger suggested yesterday that the United States would like to see the Christian Democrats and Socialists get together to prevent political stagnation. The Socialists plan to meet tomorrow.
Although Communist officials were striking a moderate tone on Italy's political future today, they were not holding back in their criticism of Mr. Kissinger. The party's newspaper, L'Unità, attacked the Secretary for his comments, saying that it was not up to him "to give out indications on the formation of the Italian Government."

In discussing the party's post-election stance, the senior party official said that the Communists were willing "to negotiate a confrontation" on seats in the Cabinet. But, he insisted, he saw no way for the Christian Democrats to emerge from the crisis without at least bringing the Communists into open talks.
Future Christian Democrats regard the election results as a mandate to keep the Communists out of the Government, and are opposed to yielding a formal role to them. They feel the move would be the opening wedge in the Communists' long-term campaign to enter the Government.
A "Government Role"
For their part, the Communists would want agreement on economic policy and perhaps important posts in Parliament. They could insist on chairmanships of committees, as well as the presidency of either the Senate or the lower house.
For the record, the Communists will continue to call for a "government role," just as Mr. Berlinguer did today in his published interviews. The questions tonight included the precise price the Communists would set for that role, no matter how limited, and the willingness of the Christian Democrats to strike the bargain.
It is expected to take some time before the dust settles. The Christian Democrats have to conclude their own internal debate over how to deal with the Communists, the Socialists have to decide how to deal with the Christian Democrats, and the Communists have to decide what to do if their proposals are rejected.
"There is no doubt the Communists could bring this country to a halt if they wanted to, given their power in the trade unions and their increased influence in Parliament," said a diplomat. "So far they are continuing to project their image of moderation. That buys some deferral of their acceptance."

Mrs. Peron and 35 Others Four Months After Quake, Victims in Guatemala's Capital Still Live in Squats Deprived of Civil Rights

By JUAN DE ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, June 23 — The military after a shake-up Argentina's military junta today deprived former President Isabel Martínez de Perón and 35 other Peronist figures of their political rights.

The junta acted under a new statute that provides that Mrs. Perón and the other prominent political and union leaders under arrest here can be held for an indefinite time without trial. They are also prohibited from disposing of their assets, such as bank accounts and property.

"It is unacceptable that those who have frustrated, compromised and damaged the higher interests of the nation can remain unpunished," said the junta headed by Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla in announcing the statute.

On the List

The list contains the names of the most prominent figures in the restoration to power of the late President Juan Domingo Perón in 1973, and those that supported his widow and successor in the presidency until she was overthrown by the armed forces March 24.

All 36 people on the list were deprived of the right to be elected to political or union office. The ban extends to occupying any public office.

On the list are Héctor J. Cámpora, who occupied the presidency in early 1973 and resigned to make way for the election of Mr. Perón, and Raúl Alberto Lasuri, former president of the Chamber of Deputies, who served as provisional President when Mrs. Perón traveled out of Argentina early in 1974.

Others include José López Rega, former Minister of Social Welfare, and the strongman behind Mrs. Perón until he was forced to flee the country by military and labor pressure, and Julio César González, who succeeded Mr. López Rega as Mrs. Perón's private secretary.

Loses Citizenship

José Ber Gelbard, Minister of Economy under Mr. Perón and in the first few months of Mrs. Perón's rule, was not only deprived of his political rights, but lost his Argentine citizenship. Mr. Gelbard, a Polish Jewish immigrant, was naturalized here, but the statute provides that the junta can cancel such citizenship.

Two lawyers who have defended left-wing extremists, Horacio Sandler and Eduardo Duhalde, lost their right to practice law.

The labor leaders affected include Casildo Herrera, former secretary general of the General Confederation of Labor; Lorenzo Miguel, leader of the metalworkers; Rogelio Papagno, the head of the construction workers and Carlos Ruckhauf, former Minister of Labor.

Some of the 35, including Mr. Lasuri, Mr. Miguel and Mr. González, are in detention here aboard a navy ship. Mrs. Perón has been held in a chalet, now surrounded by deep snow, in the lake region of Neuquén Province.

Others, including Mr. Gelbard, who lives with a daughter in California, and Mr. Herrera, who is in Mexico, were out of the country when the military took over. Mr. Cámpora took asylum in the Mexican Embassy, where he is still waiting for a safe conduct to leave Argentina.

Many of those being held, including Mrs. Perón, are expected to go on trial soon.

GUATEMALA—For the 20,000 inhabitants of the "February 4 Colony," the sprawling slum is not the only grim reminder of the earthquake that devastated Guatemala over four months ago.

From their cardboard and tin shacks, they can look across a deep ravine to the muddy scars where their homes once stood. And, in the slum itself, the struggle for survival that began with the earthquake is now being complicated by the start of the long rainy season and the continuing absence of outside assistance.

"We've had no help from the Government," said Emilio Ceballos Cabrera, a member of the slum's improvement committee. "The little help we've had has come from the Red Cross and the evangelists, but it's not much, as you can see."

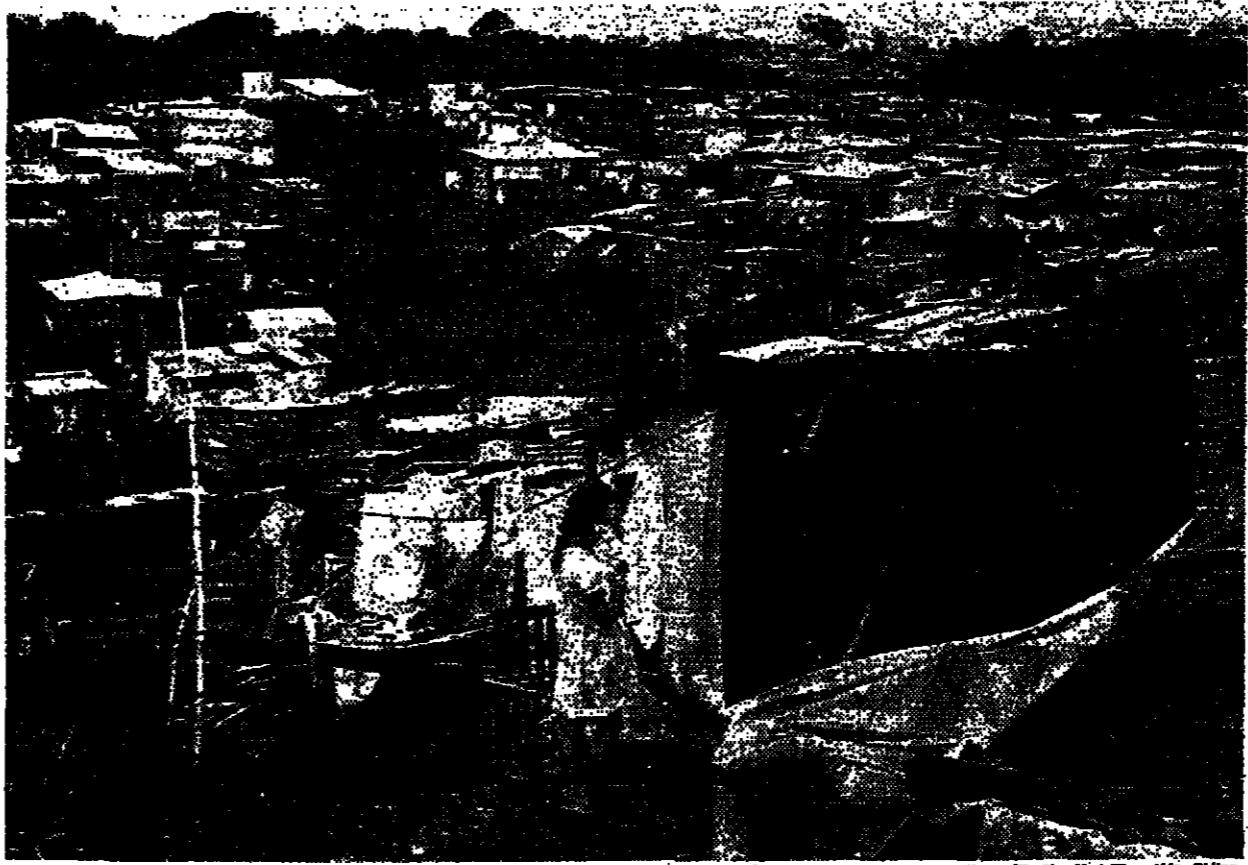

Barefoot Children at Play

Between the 3,000 shacks crowded on the muddy hillside, barefoot children played among scattered rubbish or chased stray dogs that were scavenging for food.

The slum is still without electricity and the nearest water supply is a mile away. The open-air latrines built by evangelists two months ago are now so foul-smelling and unhygienic that families are digging holes in the ground outside their huts.

Compared with the surrounding towns and villages, Guatemala City seemed to escape lightly from the earthquake that struck on Feb. 4. Of the estimated 22,934 people killed, only 1,195 were in the city.

Yet because the Government gave priority to assistance in the countryside, the onset of the rainy season has brought a wave of stomach and bronchial problems, particularly among the children.

The prices of construction materials have rocketed out of reach of slum-dwellers, few of whom earn more than $10 a week.

"We gave priority to the countryside because we wanted to brake and perhaps even reverse migration to the city," Gen. Ricardo Peralta Méndez, head of the National Reconstruction Committee, said in an interview. "Now we're turning our attention to the capital."

General Peralta said that the Government would build temporary accommodation for thousands of refugee families and then construct permanent homes "that will be a vast improvement on the homes they lived in before the earthquake."

But criticism of the Government is growing, not only among slum-dwellers who feel that their temporary shacks will inevitably become their permanent homes, but also among officials who fear that substandard living conditions are creating a potentially explosive political situation.

"The best thing that can be said about the Government at the moment is that it doesn't get in the way," a foreign aid official said. "It isn't even doing much in the country but that's where the help is going. Foreign aid and communities try to the provinces because can rebuild an entire large and have some ore to show for the. In the city, the problem great that no single group could hope much impact."

Specific Blood Test for Multiple Sclerosis Reported

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Three Duke University scientists have reported in the issue of a medical journal being published today that they have developed an accurate blood test for multiple sclerosis, a disease of the nervous system that affects more than a million people worldwide.

The experimental test promises to detect the often blinding and crippling disease at its earliest stages, even before a doctor can diagnose it from a physical examination, the scientists said in their report in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Other scientists expressed cautious optimism about the Duke report. But they urged further evaluation before the blood test is applied to the everyday practice of medicine.

It can be extremely difficult for a doctor to diagnose multiple sclerosis in its earliest stages because, among other reasons, the symptoms the disease produces are easily confused with other disorders and there has been no specific laboratory test to confirm the ailment.

Experimental Tool

The new test is considered experimental because experience with the techniques necessary to do it is limited to the laboratory where it was developed at Duke in Durham, N. C., and at a few medical centers elsewhere.

However, Dr. Nelson L. Levy said that the Duke team heads is now modifying the test so that perhaps within a year it could be done routinely in any hospital.

"We are using the test diag... histically at Duke and also as a research tool to try to understand the cause of the disease," Dr. Levy said in a telephone interview.

Dr. Levy's team reported that the test could be completed in the laboratory in four hours. The Duke researcher said that results of tests that had been expanded since his team's paper was submitted for publication indicated that the test was specific for multiple sclerosis and that it was not affected by the duration, severity or activity of the disease. Multiple sclerosis, currently incurable, is characterized by periods of activity and remission of symptoms that affect the central nervous system.

The Duke doctors found that lymphocytes from patients with multiple sclerosis, when mixed in test tubes with cells that had purposely been infected with measles virus, tended to stick together in a large rosette pattern. Lymphocytes are a type of white blood cell.

Distinctive Pattern

What has made the phenomenon potentially useful to clinicians, the doctors said, is that the rosette pattern was produced much more frequently in blood samples taken from patients with multiple sclerosis than from people who did not have the disorder.

Dr. Levy said that unexpected results from experiments that a third-year medical student, Paul S. Auerbach, was doing as part of his training program had led to the test's development. Dr. Levy, who had trained in neurology before he began to devote full time to immunologic research, said, "Because of previously unpublished research and some of our own results we expected that lymphocytes from patients with multiple sclerosis would be less, rather than more, adherent to the measles-infected cells. We got the exact reverse of the effect we expected to see."

The findings that Dr. Levy, Mr. Auerbach and Dr. Edward C. Hayes reported were financed by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, a private organization, and the Federal National Cancer Institute.

Tests were done on 27 patients with multiple sclerosis at Duke Hospital and from a chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. The results of these tests were compared with those done on 26 patients with neurological disorders and other than multiple sclerosis, and 10 apparently healthy men and women who served as controls.

Chavez Attacks the Legislature On California Farm Fund Delay

By HENRY WEINSTEIN
Special to the New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23—Cesar Chavez, president of the United Farm Workers, told the Central Conference of American Rabbis here today that the California Legislature was "playing games with the lives of the people" who pick the crops the state's 20 million residents eat.

Last night the Assembly was unable to pass the state's $12.3 billion 1976-77 budget because farm-area Democrats and Republicans objected to a segment of the budget that would fund the state's moribund Agricultural Labor Relations Board, which ran out of money in February.

A legislative conference committee had approved the appropriation earlier this week, seemingly bringing to an end a feud over the funds that had been raging since February. However, there are still some legislators who do not want to fund the board unless significant changes are made in its operations. Another vote is scheduled for Friday.

In any case, the California Secretary of State's office has certified an initiative for California's November ballot that will raise the question of the Agricultural Labor Relations Board. The board administers the state's Agricultural Labor Relations Act, passed last year, first in the nation to guarantee farm workers the right to vote in a certified election. An initiative gives voters a say on legislation.

Today, Mr. Chavez predicted the initiative would pass and "the right of farm workers to vote for the union of their choice will be written in concrete, not up to the whim of the Legislature."

Mr. Chavez came here to address the rabbi's conference because of an old friendship with Rabbi Joseph Glaser, who was an early supporter of the union. The 49-year-old union leader told the crowd of 750 persons that "the Jewish community was the first community to come to our aid and we shall never forget that."

Rabbis Support Initiative

Mr. Chavez was pressed by reporters after his speech as to whether the initiative might be removed from the November ballot if the Legislature should provide all he seeks. He indicated that this was a "remote" possibility.

The rabbinical group gave Mr. Chavez three standing ovations today, and then passed a resolution supporting the initiative.

The initiative guarantees mandatory funding of the Agricultural Labor Relations Board, provides that farm union organizers have a right of access to workers in the field for an hour before and after work and an hour at lunchtime, and provides for treble damages for unfair labor practices, among other provisions.

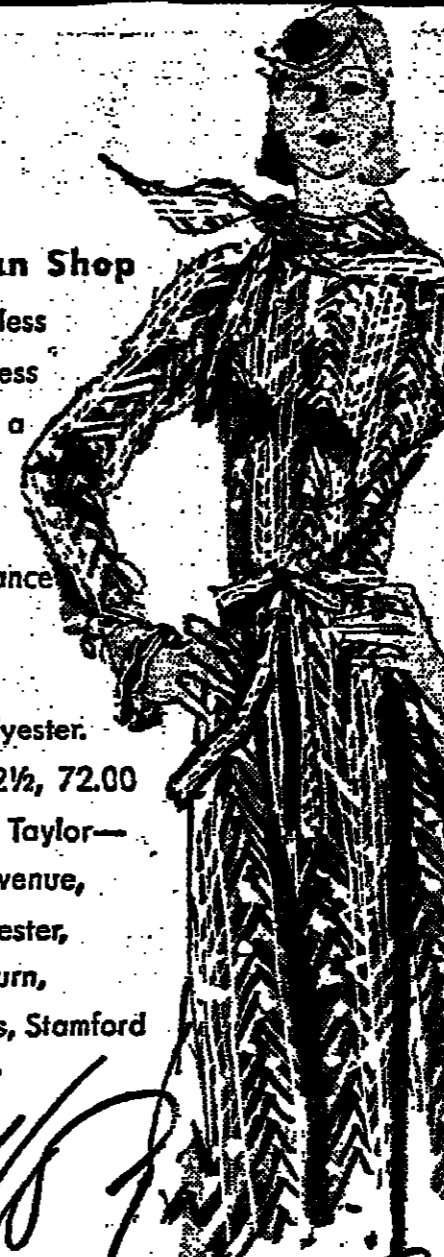

The initiative is very similar to the Agricultural Labor Relations Act passed last year, and the same access provision in that law is the feature considered most objectionable by growers who contend that it violates their property rights. The provision has been upheld by the State Supreme Court, but the growers have appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

MAN VIEWS OF KISSINGER

Who Would Become Secretary of State

Kam, June 23 (UPI) Haldeman, former chief of staff, says Kissinger was never as Secretary of State as Mr. Haldeman, President Nixon's Haldeman, in the last of a series of syndicated articles, said that House staff members set up after Mr. Kissinger's 1972 re-election called for a re-election of Mr. Kissinger as Secretary of State. "I knew who the new man was going to be," Mr. Haldeman wrote. "And he was not Henry Kissinger. I was surprised, therefore, to learn that Kissinger intended to replace me. I think it all had something to do with the weakening of Kissinger's position after the resignation of Mr. Haldeman in April 1975 as a result of the Watergate case. Mr. Kissinger was sworn in as Secretary of State on Sept. 22, 1975."

Mr. Haldeman, in a column written in cooperation with Joseph Scott, a columnist, was in the Universal Press for Thursday news-

Celebrating its 100th Anniversary Presents

Centenergy 76

Energy Conservation Study House*

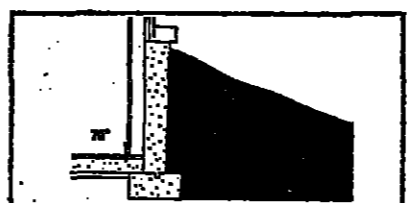

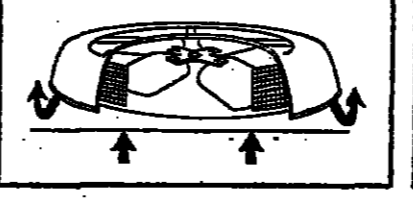

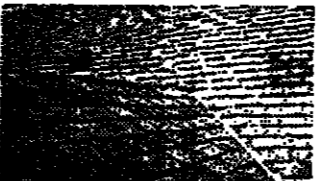

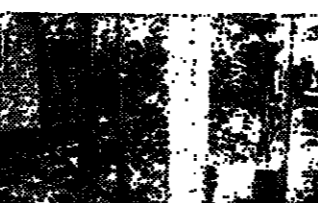

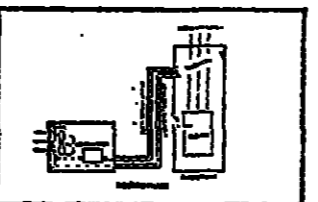

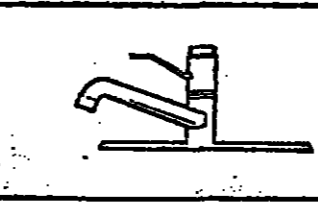

Long Island Savings Bank has sponsored the construction of this energy conservation study house to show our people some of the things that can be done today to save and conserve energy.

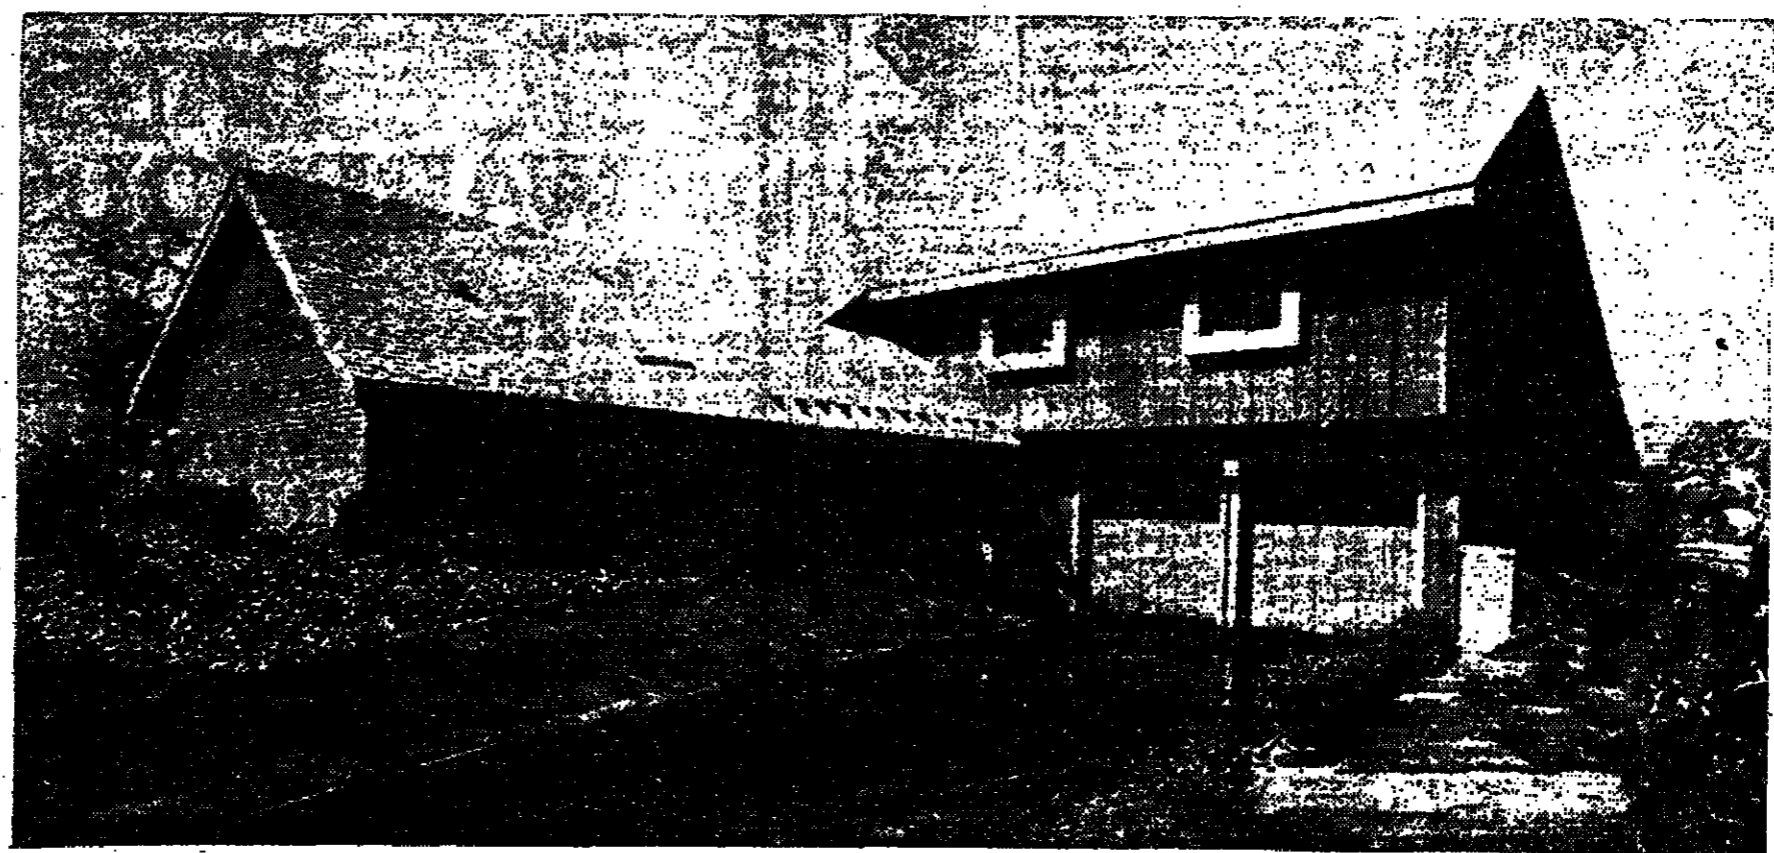

LOCATION: Hamilton Square, Mt. Sinai, L.I.

GRAND OPENING: June 25, 26, 27—11 a.m.-6 p.m. Open subsequent weekends, except July 4 weekend.

DIRECTIONS: Take Exit 63 from L.I. Expressway and drive north on North Ocean Avenue. Turn right at Canal Road, and drive 1 mile to Coram-Mt. Sinai Road. Turn right, following the directional signs.

See how these 14 energy-saving features incorporated into "Centenergy 76" can help you save up to 50% on yearly home energy costs.

1	Orientation to the Sun Proper positioning of the home on the building lot helps to take advantage of the energy-plus factors nature provides. 	8
2	Earth Berms Earthen insulators around the foundation help to control indoor temperatures year-round. 	9
3	Insulation New methods of insulation for walls and ceiling will substantially reduce heating and cooling costs. 	10
4	Enclosed Foyer An enclosed foyer at the main entryway helps to shield the home from adverse temperatures, which contribute to energy loss. 	11
5	Thermal-Break Window These specially designed windows are properly positioned and act as both thermal and noise insulators, as well as solar collectors. 	12
6	Mechanical Power Exhaust Thermostatically controlled, roof-mounted, ventilator fans reduce the heat load on the home air-conditioning units. 	13
7	Trellises Fixed wood trellises are properly positioned and help to control temperatures in winter and summer. 	14
8	Warm Tone Shingles These shingles do not attract high degrees of heat. Their thermoplastic sealing agent is activated by the sun to form a "one-piece" wind resistant roof.
	Atrium Greenhouse This covered open court in the center of the house acts as a solar collector and utilizes louvers to control and direct sunlight into rooms.
	Electric Heat Pump This pump unit contains both indoor and outdoor coils within the same cabinet, and for every penny's worth of electricity used to operate it, produces more than one penny's worth of heat.
	Energy Saving Appliances By using fixtures and appliances with built-in electricity and water saving features, we add still further to our energy conserving efforts.
	Hot Water Solar Collector Heating costs for hot water can be minimized by this unit, which uses the power of the sun to generate heat.
	Fireplace Efficiency The specially constructed fireplaces used in the house are designed to reverse the negative energy characteristics of regular fireplaces and make more efficient use of the generated heat.
	Sloped Ceilings These aesthetically designed ceilings carry heat to the second floor galleries and act as an effective "heat purge" for summer cooling.

season of "racial inequities"
there.
"We respect the independence of all nations," Mr. Carter said, "but by our example, by our utterances and by the various forms of economic and political persuasion available to us, we can quite surely lessen the injustice in this world."
Similarly, he said that while most Americans might not welcome the rise to power in other democracies of parties or leaders whose ideologies seem incompatible, "we must learn to live with diversity and to cooperate" as long as such parties and leaders respect the democratic processes, uphold existing international commitments and are not subservient to external political direction.
With respect to China and Taiwan, Mr. Carter said—in response to a question from the audience—that Japan's diplomatic steps were worthy of American emulation. Japan, he said, has managed to establish a productive relationship with both governments without damaging its ties with either.
He also said that "Italian political problems have been caused by the underlying social malaise of the country," and suggested that any solution requires "patient and significant assistance from Italy's Western European neighbors as well as from the United States."
Mr. Carter's speech yesterday was the product of his study group on foreign policy, but it was essentially the creation of Zbigniew Brzezinski, the 48-year-old Columbia University professor who has been advising Mr. Carter on foreign policy for several months.
The speech was but one part of Mr. Carter's activities in New York yesterday. In the afternoon, at five separate fundraising receptions, he met with about 175 local supporters, each of whom paid $1,000 to the Carter campaign for the opportunity to meet the candidate.
He also met briefly with the Council of Black Elected Democrats, but declined to commit his support to New York's Basil A. Paterson as vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee.
Later, Mr. Carter flew to Washington, where he was to meet today with Democratic Congressional leaders before returning to his home in Maine, Ga.

NEW JERSEY G.O.P. Doubt Voiced on Legal Bar KEEPS FREE HAND To Delegate-Vote Buying

Delegates Won't Commit Votes to President

By RONALD SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, June 23—Despite a fervent appeal by Vice President Rockefeller for a commitment to President Ford, New Jersey's delegates to the Republican National Convention appeared content today to remain close to the President but not necessarily in his pocket.
A spokesman for Senator Clifford P. Case, the leader of the state's 67-member uncommitted but pro-Ford delegation, said that he favored remaining uncommitted for the time being.
However, Thomas J. Kean, the Assembly's Republican minority leader, the chairman of the Ford campaign in New Jersey, expressed concern today, amid the hubbub of a tax debate on the Assembly floor, that the continued uncommitted posture of the delegation could result in "slippage" away from the President, presumably but not necessarily toward former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California.

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

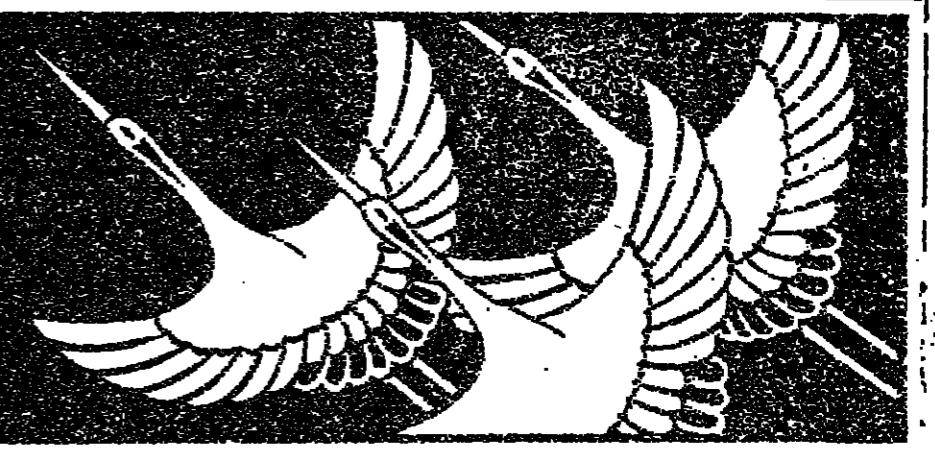

WASHINGTON, June 23—Legal authorities conclude that there is nothing to prevent a Presidential candidate from buying the support of convention delegates and very little to prevent a pledged delegate from switching sides any time he chooses.
Attorneys for President Ford and Ronald Reagan currently in a fierce contest for the Republican Presidential nomination, emphasized in interviews that their respective campaign committees were not making financial offers to delegates in return for their support, at least in part because such overtures might backfire.
But they agreed that the criminal laws prohibiting vote-buying did not appear to apply to national political conventions and that the courts were unlikely to intervene to enforce state laws that require a delegate to support the candidate he is formally pledged to for one or more ballots.
As a result, there appear to be very few legal restraints to prevent a free-for-all between the President and the former California Governor if the competition for a delegate majority at the Republican National Convention this August in Kansas City, Mo., is as close as it now appears.
John G. Murphy Jr., general counsel to the Federal Election Commission, said he thought that one Federal criminal statute could be stretched to cover bribery of convention delegates, but he conceded that "the letter of the law" did not clearly support his interpretation.
Dealing at Conventions
National political conventions have historically been freewheeling affairs, with the Vice-Presidential nomination and Cabinet appointments more or less openly bartered for delegate votes. The courts have rarely been called upon to intervene and, most recently, have refused to do so.
Federal law prohibits offering or giving a bribe "to any person either to vote or withhold his vote or to vote for or against any candidate," but election law experts interpret this as controlling primary and general elections rather than conventions.
Another criminal code provision bars a candidate from promising appointment to public or private office in return for support, but it is equally unclear whether this is intended to apply to nomination as well as election.
"I can't find anything specifically prohibiting making payments to a convention delegate," Loren Smith, general counsel to Citizens For Reagan, said, "but anything like that would be found to have strong repercussions politically."
Robert Visser, general counsel to the President Ford Committee, said that the criminal prohibitions against vote-buying appeared to apply to "regular voting at the polls." He said that historically it had always been permissible to offer delegates "a lunch at the White House," or even transportation to the convention with a stop-over in Hawaii.
Mr. Murphy, the election commission counsel, cited the only Federal statute that specifically includes conventions along with elections. It prohibits offering "any compensation" made possible in whole or in part by any act of Congress "to any person . . . for the support of any candidate . . . in connection with any . . . political convention."
The commission official said that any campaign funds of-

F.B.I. Burglaries Said to Be Sifted by Justice Dept.

department's investigation about 10 days ago when Mr. Gardner began calling agents on the telephone, identifying himself, warning them that they were targets in a criminal investigation and advising them to get lawyers. He is expected to conduct the interviews himself.
The bureau later sent agents a teletype message permitting them to retain lawyers and followed this up with a teletype message that told the agents any lawyers they chose would have to be cleared by the Department of Justice before the agents could discuss classified information with them.
The highest ranking official known to have retained a lawyer is Andrew J. Decker, who was recently promoted by Mr. Kelley to be assistant director in charge of the bureau's computer operation. Before coming to Washington, Mr. Decker was in the intelligence division and at one point was special agent in charge of the intelligence division operations in New York.
He has retained Edward Bennett Williams, one of Washington's most prominent criminal lawyers. Mr. Decker declined to comment on the case and referred all questions to Mr. Williams.
A group of present or former agents in the New York field office has retained Jack E. Solerwitz, a Mineola, L. I., lawyer who is counsel for the Federal Criminal Investigators Association.
Mr. Solerwitz confirmed that he had been hired by the F.B.I. men, but declined to name his clients or disclose their number, because he felt this would help the Department of Justice in its investigation.

Legal Liabilities
Another agent has retained Brian Gettings, the former United States Attorney in Alexandria, Va. William Hundley, a former Assistant Attorney General who now practices law in Washington, has been asked to take on the cases of still other F.B.I. men.
The legal liabilities for men who have been involved in burglaries could be difficult to determine. One F.B.I. source said that he and his colleagues had made the entries under instructions from superiors and would have been severely disciplined if they had refused.
"You know that nobody even goes to the bathroom around here without permission," he said.
He said that even if an agent was given immunity to testify in the Federal investigation, he might face burglary charges from the local authorities or a civil suit by the victims of the break-ins.
A report in The Los Angeles Times said that 20 agents, most of them in New York, were under investigation. Bureau sources said, however, that the inquiry would be "far wider" and already included the San Francisco, Los Angeles and Chicago field offices, where the bureau dealt with substantial radical political activity.
There was no indication how many agents, supervisors or top officials might be implicated in the investigation. According to F.B.I. sources, a surreptitious entry involved agents as lookouts, radio watchmen and other support functions as well as the man or men who entered the premises.

In addition to these men, the operations were authorized through the bureau's chain of command, and this same chain, the reports which contained information that would show an informed reader that the material had come from a burglary.
One well-placed source said "several hundred" men would ultimately be touched by the inquiry.
What has concerned the "street agent," according to several sources, is the fear that the F.B.I. men will be "sacrificed," and that the officials who ordered the burglary will "walk away" untouched.
The legal liability of some of the street agents was "astronomical," one source said, because the burglaries were committed by special trained agents, and the "dozens" of entries. Another source said that he knew of one agent who had made 60 entries, each of which could be the base for a criminal charge.
The entries were made to photograph and search records and to place electronic listening devices. One well-placed source said that many of the listening devices had been placed without the authorization of the Department of Justice.
F.B.I. documents released last March by the Socialist Workers Party, which obtained them in its lawsuit, showed that the party's Manhattan headquarters were burglarized by agents more than 80 times between 1960 and 1966.

Film: 'The Great Scout'

Prospecting Trio Adds Fun to Western With Harmless Dirty Tricks

"The Great Scout and Cat-house Thursday" begins well enough, with Lee Marvin winning a barroom bet by picking up a rattlesnake and kissing it. It's not exactly Cable and Lombard, but the faces have the same mutual suitability.

It ends well enough with a showdown punch-up between Marvin and the smoothie villain, Robert Culp; lots of harmless dirty tricks and rolling around in the mud.

Mr. Marvin is good at physical adversity. His features are shaped by a sandstorm, and it is in other moments, when the wind has blown out and it is time to register more subtle emotions that he seems excessive and out of place, like foul-weather gear slung over a drawing-room couch.

The problem with "Great Scout," which opened yesterday at the Cinerama and other theaters, is the long corrugated road between its beginning and end. So many clumsy examples of the funny western have gouged their way, square-wheeled, along it that we set our teeth anticipating each joke as if it were a pothole.

There were once three partners who prospected a gold claim. The first, Jack Colby — played with likable deviousness by Mr. Culp — absconded with the proceeds, made a fortune and went into politics. The other two bumped along, scavenging a living.

One is Sam Longwood (Mr. Marvin). The other, Joe Knox, is a loud-mouthed Indian half-breed whose idea of revenge on the white race is to infect it with syphilis. Knox is not so much played as pillaged by Oliver Reed. He makes him wince.

The plot has these two trying in various ways to steal their money back from Colby; one of their schemes being to kidnap his wife. The wife has a foul tongue and low sexual habits, but such is the power of graceful acting. Elizabeth Ashley makes her the movie's closest approach to civil comedy. Kay-Lenz, who plays Cat-house Thursday, a young camp-follower of Longwood's, tries hard for the same thing but misses.

Rough language, and feet sticking out of beds at non-missionary angles, earn this movie its PG rating.

Ballet: 'Merry Widow' Is a Showcase for Fonteyn

By CLIVE BARNES
The Australian Ballet has returned to New York with its new spectacular, "The Merry Widow." Opening at the Uris Theater on Tuesday night, it became almost instantly apparent that this production is more of a musical comedy than a ballet and more of a vehicle for ballet's most glamorous dame, Margot Fonteyn, than either. The fact that the leading role was not actually created for Dame Margot matters not at all—the Australians would scarcely be playing in New York without her.

The ballet follows the Franz Lehár operetta very closely, indeed, Robert Helpmann's scenario seems to be the original book with all the words left out. This is not always a help. There were many blank moments when I found myself hopelessly puzzled as to what was happening and trying desperately to think back to the original operetta. The difficulty is that even the story of the operetta is complex itself and, when that story is told simply through dance and mime, it seems to be complexly on double-time. Yet the show does have its own virtues. It looks sumptuous, Sir Robert is, as always, a master of the theater; Ronald Hynd's choreography, particularly in its duets, has class, and, of course, there is Margot.

Fonteyn is a glorious fact of life, and the ballet really shows her off. Yes, she is less limber than she once was, but there are moments when she melts into the theater and you really see the world dancing. As Fonteyn has gotten older she somehow resiliently grasped at her artistry and lunged into the core of her beauty. She offers now, and for all I know, forever, one of the most emotional experiences in dance. She throws herself at the audience with a generous grin, a feline grace, and a womanly sense of authority, wit and charm that just cannot be equaled. She is different now—no longer in her prime, but full of the autumnal glories of maturity that need no apologies. Dame Margot dances totally for herself.

There is something special about Dame Margot, but the Australian company is a most engaging one and has developed, apparently, quite a lot since it was last in New York five years ago. Obviously, this production of "The Merry Widow" is intended to be for the Australian Ballet what John Cranko's "Eugene Onegin" was for the Stuttgart Ballet, and although one can complain about the thinness of the basic material, one must admire the way it has been cut and tailored to the company's needs.

Desmond Healey has done a vividly energetic job of the costumes and décor—a strange mixture of fin de siècle and art nouveau—and

By JOHN S. WILSON
It is almost four years since Jill Corey, a popular singing star of the 1950's, resumed her career following the death of her husband, Don Hoak, the baseball player. At Once Upon a Stove, the oddy named restaurant at 325 Third Avenue, where she is appearing this week and next, Miss Corey's voice still has the bright, buoyant quality that made her a quick success on records when she was only a teen-ager, supplemented now by a maturity that enables her to apply it with sensitivity to songs by Dory Previn and Stephen Sondheim.

But although she has grown as a performer in the sense of expanding her capabilities, Miss Corey still allows herself to fall victim to her own uncertainties. At her opening Tuesday evening, she constantly undercut herself with apologies for singing some of her early hits, for her nervousness ("There are so many critics here")—and with a kind of self-mockery that came across as though she really believed it.

And yet when she settled into songs in which she felt secure—strong, straight versions of material as diverse as the Beatles' "Yesterday" or Irving Berlin's "Gee, But I Hate to Go Home Alone"—she sang with confidence and a very winning conviction even in the face of accompaniment from a piano that could scarcely qualify as a musical instrument.

Ballet: Rare 'Petrushka'

Erik Bruhn Makes Debut in the Title Role With Ballet Theater

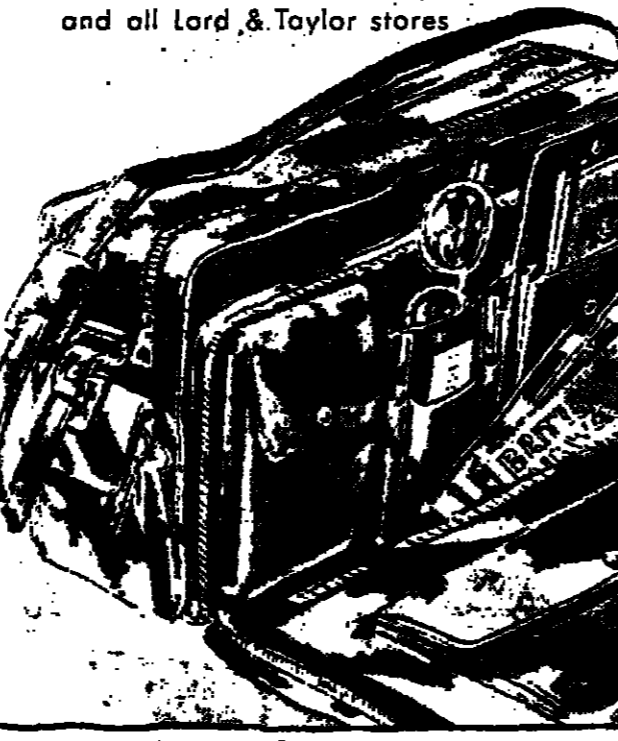

American Ballet Theater offered an unusual program Tuesday night at the Metropolitan Opera House. Erik Bruhn made his debut in the title role of "Petrushka," and Ted Knight danced the role of the Blackamoor in the ballet for the first time. Mikhail Baryshnikov and Natalia Makarova appeared in "Other Dances," the Chopin pas de deux that Jerome Robbins had created for them at a benefit for the Public Library last month. Richard Cragun stepped into the main role of Glen Teley's "Le Sacre du Printemps" that Mr. Baryshnikov had danced the preceding night.

All these novelties were extremely successful, although Mr. Bruhn's very first attempt at Petrushka anywhere in the world was bound to be a highlight. It was. This was a highly nuanced portrayal that caught the essence of the role. From his first appearance, Mr. Bruhn's Petrushka was tragic, even doomed. There was something deeper than pathos, here. It was hopelessness.

The hapless oppressed figure of the first scene was transformed into a more universalized Perun in the second. Sad even when happy, this was a lovable clown. The bleating figure in the third scene, eyes gleaming with horrifying madness, led logically to the stricken Petrushka of the death scene.

What can one expect from the most highly publicized skyscraper restaurant of them all, the shimmering, glassed-in Windows on the World atop what is almost the world's tallest building, and affording what is without doubt the world's most spectacular urban view?

Stylish Menu Is Full of Promise That Isn't Yet Fully Realized

By MIMI SHERATON

If there is one rule of thumb the well-traveled gastronome abides by, it is to avoid all restaurants on the tops of tall buildings. For no matter how high the building, nor how wide and handsome the view, food in such lofty environs invariably turns out to be much like that in nightclubs—hideous at worst, innocuous at best, and, generally, outrageously expensive.

What then can one expect from the most highly publicized skyscraper restaurant of them all, the shimmering, glassed-in Windows on the World atop what is almost the world's tallest building (second only to the Sears Tower in Chicago) and affording what is without qualification the world's most spectacular urban view?

To sum up briefly, Windows on the World, on the 107th floor of the World Trade Center's north tower, offers what is already the best food-with-a-view in this country, scant praise considering the competition.

Unquestionably the best thing about this place, other than the toy-town views of bridges and rivers, skylines and avenues, is the menu. It represents an international crossroads of gastronomy, stylish and contemporary, and perfectly suited to this particular setting in this particular city.

"I Need Time"

But six visits (two lunches, two dinners, a Sunday brunch and a private cocktail party) revealed many flaws that still have to be ironed out.

"I have the capability to produce excellent food, but what I need most is time," said Joseph Baum, president of Inhilo, the wholly owned subsidiary of Hilton International that operates all of the restaurants in the trade center complex.

Mr. Baum developed the restaurant's theme and style, directed its execution and now spends about two-thirds of his life there, tasting, watching and worrying. Those who care most about food will not be willing to grant him any time at all when paying full prices; those who want to see the restaurant everyone is talking about may be a little more patient.

Based on personal observations, what Mr. Baum needs even more than time is a sure hand at the seasoning helm. In general, the only dishes that did not need salt were those that were oversalted, and many that were perfect from a technical standpoint lacked the character (or what Mr. Baum likes to call "taste memory") that well-orchestrated seasonings impart.

A Possible Solution

The one way to achieve that is to have a very good chef seasoning to his own guess customers or to appeal to a mass taste level. That is a tall order, indeed, in an establishment geared to serve 1,000 people at full capacity, and which, in the bargain, is a semipublic facility operated by a management team rather than by an owner.

There are three rooms in which meals are or will be served, each with a different mood and menu. The Wine Cellar in the Sky, a glass-enclosed, clublike inner room lined with racks of wine bottles and glowing with a dappled light that suggests a grape arbor, is not yet opened, but will offer a daily set menu and a good deal of privacy.

The most pleasantly informal room is the Hors d'Oeuvre—by any other name a grill and cocktail lounge. At lunch there is a Danish smor-gashord and open sandwich expert, while in the evening, a Japanese master turns out impeccable sushi and sashimi.

Clams and oysters on the half shell with vinegar sauce and freshly grated horseradish are always available, as are a variety of hors d'oeuvre-type salads. Coconut fried shrimp, sesame baked clams, a mild but pleasant guacamole and several types of Greek olives and spicy pickled mushrooms were all excellent. Various satays, a veal p \hat{a} te and a too-salty taramasalata were worth skipping. One can make a meal of hors d'oeuvres here, which is entertaining when only mildly hungry but there is also a full grill menu of steaks, chops, chicken hash, salads and desserts.

The most serious eating goes on in the terraced sweep of the dining room that looks over the gardens of bridges linking Manhattan and Brooklyn on one side, and, on the other, north to the Empire State Building and beyond.

Of the appetizers sampled, at lunch or dinner, the very best was a beautiful pike and spinach p \hat{a} te, served with a white wine and butter sauce that was soothing if a bit bland.

The p \hat{a} te was so good it could stand on its own, without any sauce at all. Clams with a spring onion aspic would have been lovely too had the aspic not melted, and a ragout of duck livers with raisins in brioche, was rich and well flavored if a bit sweet for my taste as a first course.

Quail eggs in a tarragon aspic were much too stiffly set, so that the result looked like a glass paperweight, and a souffl \acute{e} of cheese and crab baked in tomatoes collapsed as the water baked out of the tomato casing.

Only two of six soups sampled had distinction—a creamed pur \acute{e} of mushrooms and a light, creamy and briny Maine mussel bisque. All others were pallid, watery and altogether boring after two or three spoonfuls and none was really steaming hot.

Entr \acute{e} es I would like to eat again included large shrimp baked with foie gras, tomatoes and dill, a pressed and fried squash tabaka that lacked only for crispness and a spiking of fresh coriander and chili pepper in its sour prune sauce, and a delicately steamed cut of striped bass enveloped in lettuce leaves that sweetened the fish flavor.

A platter of steamed vegetables was gorgeously fresh and colorful enough to photograph but as totally without salt as hospital food. Unfortunately, adding salt on the surface is never quite the same as having it cooked all the way through the food.

A rack of spring lamb with a pur \acute{e} of tomato-nicoise was ordered pink but came almost raw, a pity since it otherwise would have been delicious. Two complete failures were cocotte of baked shrimp in a milky Pernod sauce, and a brochette of sea scallops that tasted as washed out as they looked.

There were some marvelous shredded fried potatoes served under an herbed tomato, but side orders of greasy, overly dark fried zucchini and a bitingly salty grilled eggplant with soy and ginger were disastrous.

Friends whose judgment I value report favorably on the roast prime sirloin of beef with mushroom pur \acute{e} and a truffle-enriched sauce P \acute{e} rigourdine.

But on the negative side, and as a result of a disappointing firsthand experience, I can steer you away from the club sandwich at lunch, acceptable, perhaps, if sent up by room service in an out-of-the-way hotel. But the cold, half-fried bacon; overripe tomato too thickly sliced, crumbling toast, limp lettuce leaf and no mayonnaise until requested makes this eminently skippable.

The Best of All

The most triumphant course of all is dessert, and this from a nondessert eater.

Which to choose is the question and all are worth saving room for: the open tart with paper-thin slices of lemon over a lemony soft custard in a buttery crisp pastry shell, the crunchy and creamy hazelnut dacquoise layers, and the ecstatically sinful chocolate pastry cake, a layering of a bitter choco-

A vanilla ice cream sundae crowned with ripe mangoes and a crisping of toasted macadamia nuts, a mocha mousse crunchily with pecan praline, and a frozen souffl \acute{e} crusted with the bitter Italian macaroon amaretti were nothing less than extraordinary.

On the other hand we had an order of strawberries—half rotten, half unripe—that should never have left the kitchen, and a floating island that was technically perfect but which needed a shot of liqueur or vanilla to light up its sauce.

Buffet Is Lavish

At lunch there is a lavish buffet here, with many of the same choices that deck out the Sunday all-day brunch-lunch-dinner.

Exceptional herrings, pickled shrimp, a salad of sea bass and celery, chick peas, cold Japanese noodles with soy sauce and scallions, and a very high quality array of cold sliced roast meats and sausages are all included. Hot dishes on Sunday are

Its Lush Interior Is Stylish, Too

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

The design of the club and restaurant atop the World Trade Center would probably send Mies van der Rohe whirling in his grave. Gone is the austerity, the tightness, the discipline of purist modern architecture, but instead of seeking refuge in any historical style, the architect for the project, Warren Platner, has taken elements of modern design and loosened them, manipulated them, and contorted them into a style that can only be called sensuous modernism.

It is not, in principle, a bad idea. Miesian purism by now is commonly acknowledged to be a style of the past, and anyway it was never very able in its cold rigidity to provide dining spaces that satisfied the imagination as well as the rational eye. Dining in a restaurant is a fantasy experience, and there is nothing wrong with a restaurant's design playing up to this.

And play up this restaurant does. The main dining room of Windows on the World, as the 107th floor is called, is done in soft pastels, with tufted vinyl banquettes, lots of brass, and fabric-covered walls. The room is so lush that even the simple wood-and-cane Prague chairs used at the freestanding tables, a classic modern design, take on a certain voluptuousness.

The dining room is elaborately terraced, which has the advantage of assuring window views for every table as well as of dividing the room into intimate groupings of just a few tables each. The room seats 350 people, yet it never feels oppressively large.

The over-all plan is as intelligently conceived as that of any skyscraper-top restaurant in New York; the service facilities are all in the center and the dining areas, both public and private, stretch out along the periphery. Mr. Platner moves people well through space; there is an attractive vestibule, a small room beyond it to permit an introductory glimpse of the view, a long gallery connecting the entry to the bar and dining room, and a promenade along the window wall to the eating area.

There are also constant and skillfully wrought changes in level. One walks up a few steps sometimes to go right down again, but each time it heightens a sense of entrance, or the drama of a new aspect of the utterly extraordinary view, or the sense of movement from one kind of a room to another in the huge complex.

Frozen in Space

The view, incidentally, is like nothing else in New York: it is more like seeing the city from an airplane frozen in time than from the top of a building. Looking north, the skyscrapers of midtown are a totality, a city in themselves glistening in the distance, while looking east, lower Manhattan and the East River bridges are seen at an angle approaching the vertical and take on an entirely different kind of drama.

With such a view, and with such a general design concept, Windows on the World comes close indeed to succeeding. But the design does have its drawbacks, and unfortunately they are as conspicuous as its virtues.

Mr. Platner has a sense of detail that is puzzlingly inconsistent. The tufted vinyl banquettes recall (as so much of the design does) the World Trade Center's undeniable ancestor, the Four Seasons, Philip Johnson's design of 1958 that Joseph Baum, the World Trade Center restaurant's creator, also oversaw. But where the Four Seasons never strayed from its basic vocabulary, here there are magenta velvet coverings on the stair rails, corvy gold-leaf decorations on some of the glass doors, and little strands of yarn as decoration, on the fabric-covered walls. And the entrance corridor is a gallery of mirrors that is at best silly, at worst vulgar.

Even with these lapses, the design clearly triumphs over Minoru Yamasaki's ghostly design of the trade center buildings themselves; Mr. Platner and Mr. Baum managed, in fact, to do the architect one better by convincing the Port Authority to widen the oppressively narrow windows of the other floors on the restaurant level, and they have rounded the mullions between each window to create a pleasant wall texture and avoid the caged feeling the other floors of the center create.

The total cost of the project, including fixtures was $7.5 million, and some of the decisions about allocating resources are curious indeed. There is cheap acoustical tile on ceilings throughout, damaging to the design; yet money was available to create a mezzanine room that is a veritable temple of pink Norwegian marble. It is doubtless the most elaborate such facility constructed in New York in years.

Mr. Platner's problem, in the end, is that he just doesn't seem to have been sure where to stop, and thus everything got fussed up a lot more than it had to—more than it had to even to create the sensual mood Mr. Platner was obviously, and correctly, after.

One coat becomes three: When poplin raincoat, left, seemingly collared lining, is removed, there is a quilted inner coat, center. And when that one is turned inside out, lining becomes a fur-bordered evening coat, right.

A Raincoat With Hidden Talents

By ANGELA TAYLOR

The stars of the Ben Thylin collections are always the raincoats. It's not that every other furrier doesn't do fur-lined coats, but this house has a special stunt that it has perfected over the years.

It works thusly: The first view is of a silk poplin coat with a fur collar—able is the most impressive—and more fur inside the front closure. In step two, the model removes the poplin shell. Underneath is a quilted taffeta or satin coat, colored and bordered in fur. By turning this lining inside out, she has a perfect evening coat. Travelers love the idea, since with the unadorned shell, they have three coats in one, whatever the weather or occasion.

Another handy Thylin specialty is the fabric shawl bordered in fur. This year, it comes in taupe silk jersey with Russian raccoon (known as sea fox in the industry, for no explainable reason), white fox on black wool jersey.

Every so often, the men who work in pelts get excited about a new discovery. In the past, it's been a new mink mutation or a longer-haired variety that resembles sable. This season's wonder is a technique that somehow locks two furs together, so there is fur both inside and out. It makes for a remarkably lightweight and wonderful-feeling garment. A couple of jackets of the new pelts have appeared in other collections. Mr. Thylin seems to have cornered enough for a street-length coat that's wheat-colored mink on one side and matching sheared beaver on the other.

Not all the furs did tricks, there were any number of non-reversible. In this category, there was a plentitude of sheared beaver, a fur that hasn't been around much since everybody had one back in the forties. It's prettiest an natural, in brown with subtle, silvery stripes, but it may also be had bleached or dyed in colors from snowy white to caramel.

For the traditionalists who want the very nicest pelts that do nothing but look elegant and expensive, Thylin has another group. Several Russian sables, a handsome Canadian fisher greatcoat, a Black Willow mink coat, very dark and rich and worked hair up.

Two lucky customers may have coats in the dark, grayish mutation called Black Iris. The furrier was able to get just two bundles of these pelts. Another limited-edition fur is Samink, the long haired variety. Other shoppers will have to console themselves with a superb silver fox coat, a snowy Alaskan coyote greatcoat or a fox one that's dyed to resemble fisher.

Women in C Get Down to

By HAROLD FABE

ITHACA, N.Y.—"I'm looking for a job but it's a tight year," said Margaret S. Silver on graduation day at the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences here at Cornell University. She majored in natural resources.

"There's absolutely no problem in being accepted," said Jean D. Spooner, who will be going to graduate school at North Carolina State in Raleigh as a paid research assistant. She majored in soil sciences.

The contrasting immediate future of the two young women, both of whom were graduated with distinction for high grades, is a dramatic illustration of the changing trends in a relatively new and burgeoning field for women—agriculture.

In the last 10 years, applications from women for admission to the agriculture school here have more than tripled and women have almost reached parity with men in what was once a man's world. The new freshman class that starts in September will have 275 women and 308 men, according to the admissions office.

The growth of women at Cornell's Agriculture School is part of a national pattern. One study showed that at the beginning of the 1975-76 school year there were more than 25,000 women enrolled at 70 agricultural colleges across the country, more than 25 percent of the total enrollment.

In Many Fields

"The number of women here has increased dramatically in the last six or seven years," said W. Keith Kennedy, dean of the College of Agriculture here. "We've always had some women in the biological sciences and animal sciences, but now we have many in agronomy, agricultural economics and vegetable crops."

And the women are doing at least as well as the men academically at Cornell.

Women are graduating in larger numbers as well. At Ohio State, for example, 151 women graduated over a 10-year period ending in 1972. In the next three years, the number of women graduates totaled 211.

But for the new women agricultural graduates, the job picture is mixed—bright for those in technical fields such as agronomy (the study of field crops and soils) and agricultural economics, but near-dismal for those with more generalized training in such popular fields as environmental, natural resources and ecology, according to members of the staff here.

Nadjari Says Grumet Inquiry on Charges Was 'No Investigation'

By TOM GOLDSTEIN Maurice R. Nadjari charged yesterday that a special state investigator had conducted "no investigation" before reaching the conclusion that Governor Carey's decision last December to replace him had not been influenced by "self-motivated" or "politically motivated people" as Mr. Nadjari had asserted at the time.

Mr. Nadjari declared at a news conference: "I said it then. I say it now. The Governor attempted to remove me for reasons other than merit." The future of Mr. Nadjari, whose term is scheduled to expire next Tuesday, appeared late yesterday to be nearing a resolution.

The Governor met with Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz, Mr. Nadjari's nominal superior, and John Keenan, the chief assistant in the Manhattan District Attorney's office. Mr. Keenan is the leading contender to replace Mr. Nadjari as special state prosecutor of corruption in New York City's criminal justice system.

Sources close to the situation said last night that Mr. Carey had definitely recommended to Mr. Lefkowitz that Mr. Keenan be appointed as special state prosecutor. It was not known what Mr. Keenan's jurisdiction would be, under the Governor's request. In a statement issued at 6:20 P.M., a spokesman for the Governor said: "The discussion encompassed most recent developments, and it was agreed that a final determination would now be forthcoming without undue delay." The spokesman, James Vlasto, declined to elaborate. In a 101-page report released Tuesday, Jacob B. Grumet, a former State Supreme Court justice, concluded there was no evidence to support Mr. Nadjari's allegation that the Governor's decision in December was a result of "improper influences."

Instead, the report said, the Governor's unsuccessful attempt to replace Mr. Nadjari had been "based upon his independent judgment." Mr. Nadjari said yesterday that Mr. Grumet had accepted "without investigation the declarations of the Governor and the Governor's political and personal aides."

Statement by Grumet Mr. Grumet strenuously denied Mr. Nadjari's assertions. "My appraisal of evidence differs from Mr. Nadjari's," he said in an interview. "I cannot and will not indulge in speculation, probabilities or possibilities, as Mr. Nadjari has done."

Mr. Grumet took testimony over a four-month period from the Governor and three of his top aides—Judah Grubitz, his counsel; David Burke, his secretary; and Robert Morgado, his chief of operations. He also interviewed Mr. Nadjari and Patrick J. Cunningham, who has taken a leave of absence as the Democratic state chairman. Mr. Nadjari said yesterday he had examined grand jury testimony and transcripts or wiretaps supplied him by Mr. Nadjari.

Mr. Nadjari said he had begun an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the attempted dismissal but had discontinued it when Mr. Grumet was named five months ago. "Given the opportunity I shall continue it, since it has not been done to date," Mr. Nadjari said. If his tenure is extended again, he will have a grand jury subpoena the Governor and his top aides, he said.

Mr. Nadjari repeated previous statements that he would not stay on if Mr. Carey and Mr. Lefkowitz diluted his powers and named another prosecutor to handle new investigations. "I could not serve in any respect with that kind of monkey sitting on my shoulder," he said.

Mr. Nadjari said that Mr. Keenan "is conceptually against the office of special prosecutor," and that he "would come in merely as a custodian." Mr. Keenan has told associates he would not accept the job if he had only partial control of the office. He said last night that he had never opposed the concept of a special state prosecutor. Yesterday's news conference was Mr. Nadjari's first since Dec. 25, when he made the charges that led to Mr. Grumet's appointment.

As during the December news conference, Mr. Nadjari's aides lined the walls yesterday of the room in his World Trade Center offices that is ordinarily used by his Manhattan grand jury. The Governor may have known Mr. Nadjari hinted that he was investigating high-level Democrats as early as Dec. 4. It was on that evening that Mr. Grumet said the Governor decided to replace Mr. Nadjari.

Mr. Nadjari said that earlier that day Judge Anthony Mercorella of Civil Court was informed by his office that "we wanted to question him on the manner in which he obtained" his judgeship.

Upon receiving that notification, Mr. Mercorella, an intimate of Mr. Cunningham, discussed Mr. Cunningham's law partner, Kenneth Kase, Mr. Nadjari said. All three men have since been indicted by Nadjari in a question-and-answer period Mr. Nadjari declined to explain how he knew the Governor had been made aware of this investigation before his

Dec. 4 evening meeting with his aides. In his report, Mr. Grumet alluded to the possibility that the Governor had learned of this investigation, but then he rejected the possibility. "The evidence which I received regarding this situation rejects the speculations suggested," he said.

Disparagement Charged Mr. Nadjari also said yesterday that Mr. Grumet had failed to include in his report testimony to the effect that the Governor's top aides and Mr. Cunningham "disparaged me to the Governor."

"Nor do I understand why Mr. Grumet did not include in his report that Mr. Cunningham was in the Governor's offices at the time I was dismissed by the Governor," Mr. Nadjari declared.

In response, Mr. Grumet said yesterday that Mr. Cunningham's presence in the Governor's office on Dec. 23, "which was two days before Christmas, meant nothing." He also pointed to page 97 of his report in which he said of the Governor: "Undoubtedly, during 1975, in meeting people inside and outside his office, including Mr. Patrick J. Cunningham, he has heard various comments regarding Special Prosecutor Nadjari. Some of these comments were of a critical nature."

Mr. Grumet said yesterday that Mr. Cunningham during his testimony, recalled that he had said Mr. Nadjari was a "son of a bitch." But Mr. Grumet said that Mr. Cunningham could not recall when he had said this, or if the Governor had been present. Mr. Grumet said he had omitted this from his report as a matter of taste.

Mr. Nadjari asserted yesterday that critical remarks by Mr. Cunningham and aides of Mr. Carey "in and of themselves prove influence by self-motivated persons."

Merchandising executives and buyers in all of the country's leading department stores read The New York Times Magazine and its six special fashion reports that cover men's, women's and children's apparel. That's why 240 pages of men's wear advertising alone was placed in The Times Magazine and "Report on Men's Wear." The Times Magazine has 4,115,000 readers... including almost 2,000,000 men. These men have a higher median employment income than the readers of The New Yorker, Sports Illustrated and Esquire. And 84 percent of the male readers of The Times Magazine do not read Esquire. They look to "Report on Men's Wear" each season for news of current fashions. More than half of these male readers are college graduates. And more than half hold professional/managerial positions. Laid-Off Teachers Tell About Broken Careers

By GEORGE VECSEY
 Tony Curiale is "depressed." A few years ago, he went into a profession he thought he could pursue with dignity and security for all his working days. But now he sees that world crumbling all around him.

Mr. Curiale is a young New York City schoolteacher — an endangered species. More than 11,000 teachers have been laid off since the city began chipping at the school budget last summer, and more could be let go this summer.

"If every conversation in school is about another depressing fact, wouldn't you be depressed?" asked Mr. Curiale. "Layoffs. Teachers getting bumped from one school to another. Bigger classes. More hours. Fewer benefits. You try not to take it into the classroom with you. After all, the kids had nothing to do with it."

By all accounts, the teachers do not seem warlike, their skill and even their own pockets seem to be in good luck. The children of New York undoubtedly lost some quality in their education, while the teachers lost some confidence in a profession that has been a safe and respectable goal for generations of New Yorkers.

"Traditionally, teachers have made a trade-off," said Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers. "If they weren't going into a business where they can make a million dollars at least, they would never be out of work."

That belief has been shattered now. Teachers are taking unemployment and welfare payments; teachers are hustling for new careers. Teachers are leaving New York. And the ones who are left say they are "depressed."

"I feel badly for the children," said one teacher. "More children are unhinged than ever before—they just don't get attention at home. The children crave affection. They want to eat you up. But after 25 children, each child is like five extra. You cannot listen to 30 or 35 children. They become like mashed potatoes. I feel as if I'm just washing education into them collectively."

This concern was heard many times in interviews all over the city—teachers entrusted with children in a disturbed society, yet knowing public opinion has considered teachers more expendable than sanitationmen.

"People want to know why a teacher should make $20,000 a year and drive a new car," said Michael Ehrlich of Intermediate School 59 in Springfield Gardens, Queens, who has been teaching since 1947 but will be dropped in June.

"I've got parents in this school, good people," Mr. Ehrlich said. "The father dresses like Astor's pet horse—beautiful. He's making $25,000 when I'm making $20,000 and I'm getting laid off. It burns me to think that I'm the dummy of this city."

Many teachers seem stunned to realize how powerless they are to prevent layoffs. Last September, despite a week-long strike that ended with teachers agreeing to work two extra periods a week.

"We've got no power," said Mr. Ehrlich. "Not that we want power. If we strike, so what? They penalize us two days' pay under the law. It's not like a garbage strike where the streets stink, or a fireman's strike, where buildings burn down. If they tried doing this to garbage men, they'd dump garbage on Abe Beame. What do we do? Nothing."

In the past, Mr. Shanker has been considered such a powerful force that he could be blamed for starting World War III in Woody Allen's movie "Sleeper." But Mr. Shanker does not seem warlike these days. In a recent interview, he criticized the Board of Estimate for cutting school funds and favoring other unions. But then he added:

"I don't think anybody deliberately set out to do this. This is what we're going to do. But this is how it worked out after all the political trade-offs."

He contended that more union members had been criticizing him lately.

"Some of them want to send Shanker a message," Mr. Shanker said. "But I'll tell you, if they thought somebody else was really going to be elected, they'd hop over to me. Angry they are. Suicidal they are not."

Teachers everywhere are bitter over the method of "bumping" teachers based on seniority. However, teachers who had changed licenses or upgraded their jobs had no carryover seniority. Mr. Ehrlich, who has switched licenses from Hebrew to social studies to English, was recently told all re-certified teachers would be laid off in June.

"After six years I have nothing," he said.

Slightly Better Paid

As a result of the cuts, the city teaching staff has probably grown older and slightly better paid, since younger teachers invariably suffered the most. Last year, there were 65,000 teachers making an average of $18,000 a year, according to union figures. Many of the teachers earned the maximum $20,350 for eight years of experience with a master's degree plus 30 credits.

Also last year, the city staff was 9.6 percent black and 3.1 percent Hispanic—many of them having entered the system in recent years and susceptible to layoffs and "bumping."

This is seen by many black and Hispanic educators, and some whites, as a sad loss, since the city student population has become increasingly nonwhite.

With blacks making up 36.6 percent of students and Hispanics 27.7 percent in the 1974 school survey, most educators agree that students need role models of black and Hispanic teachers. "There is an efficiency of transfer when students and teachers can identify with each other," said Charles Wilson, superintendent of District 23.

Anthony Alvarez, superintendent of District 4 in Harlem, said the bumping process would be "devastating" for the system at large. "Our society needs different types," he declared. "We now are getting an institution characterized by an under teaching population. There will be no young blood. And if you cut down youth, you cut down ethnic diversity."

"We had three good young black teachers get transferred out," said Dorothy Purvis, a black teacher with many years of experience at Public School 40 in South Jamaica, Queens. "These teachers were not racially minded. Wherever they go, they'd be good teachers. But they were just what this district needed—young and imaginative and good disciplinarians."

Almost all remaining teachers lamented the loss of "cluster" teachers who taught specialty subjects to small groups and all worried about increased class size.

"With 20 kids in a class, you can go over a few children's work every day," said Jane Lamster of P. S. 34 in Queens. "But with 37, if you give a book report, you need 10 minutes each, and that's just for checking spelling and correct facts, maybe a fast trip to the library to make sure they didn't copy from the book jacket. You don't give essay questions on tests."

Most teachers felt they had given up too much when they exchanged two preparation periods to teach two extra classes.

"I use audio-visual equipment in social studies," said Homer Kennedy of I. S. 183 in the Bronx. "That means I must come in early to set up. Some days I teach the first three periods. I need that prep period to recuperate."

Under the new setup, Mr. Kennedy has 23 classes, five lunch periods, four hall patrols and eight prep periods, including the last two Wednesday after classes are dismissed. Most teachers put in similar schedules, handling more than 30 youngsters with enough energy to levitate the building.

The teachers also feel the loss of guidance counselors ("a crime," one teacher said). One teacher had a child in her class who moped in the closet, idly rubbing coats on the floor. She got no help until Superintendent Howard Rosenstein personally charged to get the child admitted for mental help. Stories about disturbed children are heard in every classroom.

Teachers also criticized the loss of truant officers ("I've got kids who can be salvaged," said Mr. Kennedy of I. S. 183) and the lack of supplies ("I've spent $150 out of my own pocket just to run my class," said a teacher in Brooklyn).

But it would be wrong to say the system just stopped dead this year. In every school there were teachers and administrators with great enthusiasm and apparent skill.

At P. S. 181 in Rosedale, Queens, Hedda Denburg held the attention of her 34 students by asking frequent questions and praising the answers. She treated her students, from mainly black, middle-class homes, with respect—and got respect in return. When a reporter visited the class, Mrs. Denburg confidently let her students describe what the budget cuts meant to them—shortage of books, fewer library visits, no students council, fewer lunchroom aides, fewer administrators.

But even the most positive teachers said they were more tired this year, less willing to get involved in extra work.

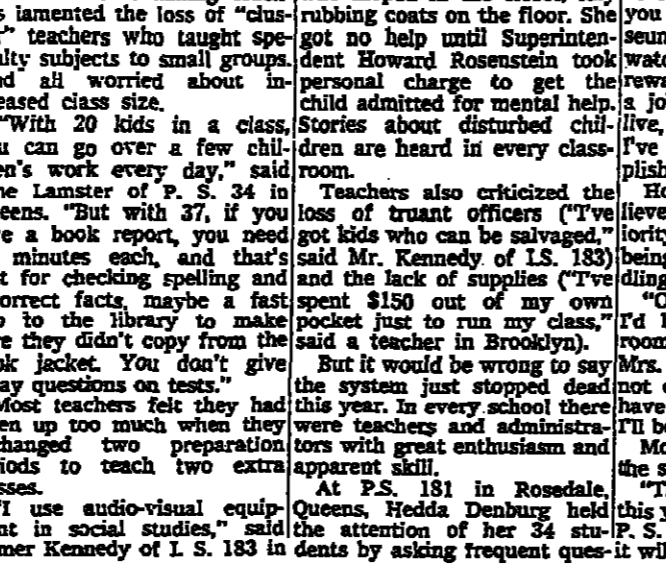

"I love these kids," said Kathy O'Donnell, a tall, outgoing veteran of eight years at P. S. 18 in the Bronx. "When you bring these kids to the museum for the first time and watch them light up, that's very rewarding. I could probably get a job in New Jersey, where I live, but I'd rather teach here. I've always felt I was accomplishing something."

However, Mrs. O'Donnell believes her eight years of seniority may not protect her from being bumped because of dwindling enrollment in District 7.

"Ordinarily, over the summer I'd buy things for my class and I'd plan my lessons," Mrs. O'Donnell said. "But I'm not doing that this summer. I have no way of knowing where I'll be next year."

Most teachers in the city feel the same way.

"The system almost fell apart this year," said Paul Fishbein of P. S. 18. "If they cut any more, it will be chaos."

HOFSTRA NAMES A NEW PRESIDENT

Shuart, Administrative Aide, Replaces Payton Today

Special to The New York Times
 HEMPSTEAD, L. I., June 23—Dr. James M. Shuart, who has served as Hofstra University's president for administrative services since last year, was elected today to be the university's sixth president.

Dr. Shuart will take office tomorrow. He will replace Robert L. Payton, who announced his resignation to the board of trustees last week after having served three years.

George Dempster, chairman of the 24-member board, said at a news conference that Dr. Shuart had been elected unanimously by the trustees and that the Faculty Senate and student groups had strongly supported the choice.

Dr. Shuart, who for more than a year was Nassau's Deputy County Executive and for three years the county's Commissioner of Social Services, served the university in various capacities between 1959 and 1971. He graduated from the school in 1952 and also received a master's degree there.

The 45-year-old educator, who lives in Freeport, L. I., will receive a salary of $27,000 a year, plus a $1 million bonus of declining enrollment and higher costs.

Mr. Payton's resignation was linked by Mr. Dempster to a shift in the responsibilities of the college, president toward more concentration on fiscal than scholarly matters.

Hofstra, founded in 1935, has 12,000 students.

By ROBERT BYRN

Walter Browne, the United States champion, and Jan Timman, a Dutch grandmaster, have lately been producing a fascinating duel centering around the merits of a theoretically important line of the Najdorf variation of the Sicilian Defense. Browne has become almost as much of a disband spokesman for this ultra-sharp defense as Bobby Fischer once was, and Timman—knowing exactly what he can expect when he opens 1 P-K4—approaches their encounters with the best that homework can provide.

In their last three Najdorf struggles, Timman has held the upper hand, two victories to one, but the real winners are the numerous students of this complicated opening who have served a marvelous indoctrination every game.

A Question Remains

In the most recent of their games, from the Euwe Quadrangular in Amsterdam, Timman achieved his second victory, though there is a real question who should have had the better of the opening.

Browne repeated the 11... N-N3, which had worked well against Timman in Wijk-aan-Zee 1974 after 12 KR-E1, P-K4; 13 N-B5, BxN; 14 P-B, O-O; 15 B-R4, Pxp. Timman varied from their second encounter in Wijk-aan-Zee 1975, discarding 12 B-R4 in favor of 12 KR-B1, so that he could meet 12... P-K4 by 13 N-B5, P-N3; 14 NxB, BxQ; 15 BxN, B-E3; 16 P-B5, B-B5; 17 BxB, QxR; 18 R-B3, R-KB1; 19 RxB, with an overwhelming attack.

If Browne had played 13... O-O, Timman could efficiently have shifted his attack by 14 B-E2, B-B5, and 15 Q-K3. Consequently, Browne developed a rook for counterattack with 13... R-QB1.

Brooklyn College Graduates 6,000, Its Biggest Class

The class that graduated from Brooklyn College yesterday was the largest in the school's 46-year history and may be the last to enjoy free tuition. Nearly 6,000 students gathered on the campus lawn to receive their degrees under a bright sun that had them quickly discarding their black robes.

Sam Levenson, the humorist and a 1934 graduate of Brooklyn College, received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree and kept many minds off the oppressive heat with reminiscences of his alma mater. But he interrupted his humorous monologue to assent to the end of free tuition, saying that "those who pose an obstacle to education should be condemned in the name of civilization."

Alfred A. Giardino, former chairman of the Board of Higher Education who resigned last month to protest the end of free tuition, told the graduating class that "political leaders have not appreciated the contribution that City University has made to the well-being of New York City."

Members of the graduating class noted the passing of free tuition with mixed feelings.

Mark Stewart, a 21-year-old accounting major from Brooklyn, said he considered himself to be one of the last tuition-free graduates.

Cora Kaiser, a 21-year-old Italian major, commented: "I had to pay tuition, I'd go someplace else."

3 Who Found Themselves Without Jobs

The waves of layoffs this year have affected the lives of New York City teachers in varying ways. Following are profiles of three of them:

Mildred Gilgoff

It was supposed to be the "trip of a lifetime" for Mildred Gilgoff—a trip around the world, the first sabbatical of her teaching career.

While she was gone, she almost lost her career. She got the news in New Delhi. She had arranged to be there on Jan. 26, India's Republic Day. The next day she visited the offices of the American Express Company to get her first mail from home in three months. A secretary from Public School 231 in Queens warned Mrs. Gilgoff most sabbaticals had suddenly been canceled during the city's financial crisis.

Not sure if she had actually been recalled, Mrs. Gilgoff initiated a costly series of telegrams and phone calls to the headquarters of the Board of Education. If she had been recalled, she would have rushed back. If not, she could continue the trip that she had made plans for during the past year.

Unable to get a direct answer from headquarters, Mrs. Gilgoff continued her journey to Thailand.

"I spent 10 days in Bangkok waiting for an answer," she recalled. "Ten days with all my sight-seeing done. I was waiting for them to give me an answer."

She then learned she had already been laid off—for failure to return to work on time. Stunned, Mrs. Gilgoff rushed home from Asia to fight for her job as a guidance counselor. But another teacher had already been assigned to her post.

Howard Rosenstein, the superintendent of District 29, placed Mrs. Gilgoff in two other schools. She is now fighting for several months of back pay, held out by the city when her sabbatical was canceled. She is moving back and forth between two sons' homes, since she sublet her own apartment. She doesn't know if she will ever visit those countries she never got to see.

"The board acknowledges that I was in touch with them," Mrs. Gilgoff said. "One girl even knew what hotel I was staying at in Thailand. But they never bothered to send me a telegram there to come home. Maybe I'll get my salary back on appeal. But I can never forgive them for this."

Kenneth Larsen

The room is packed with supplies that Kenneth Larsen purchased with his own money in the three years he was teaching.

The supplies are staying on the shelf this year—and so is Kenneth Larsen, who never even got to be a regular teacher. After three years as a full-time substitute, he had no chance to work this year. Thousands of certified teachers were being dismissed by the city.

"We all miss Kenny," said Robert Burger, the principal of Public School 1, in Tottenham, S. I. "Kenny used to take the classes down to the beach and show them marine life. Then he set up an aquarium in our building. We miss him greatly."

Mr. Larsen, who is a bachelor, said that he always managed the few extra dollars for the marine supplies his class needed.

"Thirty years old and still floating around," Mr. Larsen said with a sigh. "I guess this never would have happened if I hadn't spent three years in the Navy. By the time I got out of college, there were no jobs."

Mr. Larsen put himself through Wagner College on Staten Island, and later paid for his master's degree there, too.

"I've put out a big bundle of money in private schools just so I could become a teacher," he said. "But I've gotten so little in return. It's very, very disappointing."

Since the layoffs, Mr. Larsen has been collecting unemployment benefits, as have many other dismissed teachers. He spends the good weather sport-fishing, not wishing to take a job "stacking cans on a shelf."

Mr. Larsen said that next fall would be "the critical time for me—either I leave the area or I give up teaching."

"Gee, I hate to think about either," he added. "I love Staten Island and I loved having my own class, setting up my own lessons, making plans. But I could be 30 years old and still not have a teaching job."

Doug Nash

Everybody knows Doug Nash at Intermediate School 183. He is the young math teacher with the thick muscles and the soft voice who makes the noisiest classes work quietly.

"The word gets out," Mr. Nash said casually. "Mr. Nash won't play."

The students also know that if they do not do their homework, they do not pass the course, even if it means they must be left back.

"On a scale of five, I'd rate Doug Nash at four and a half," said John Crawford, the principal.

It also helps, in this section of the South Bronx, to have as a teacher a young black man, just a few years out of City College, whose speech is precise, who gives "good" feedback who visits the families of his students and who shoots baskets in the projects. Mr. Nash is such a teacher, and he is an example of what some of those students could grow up to be.

But Doug Nash equates the dwindling enrollment in the burned-out South Bronx with the number of math teachers in District 7, and he gloomily predicts:

"I don't see how I can survive. No way I can be saved again."

All over the city, young teachers have been bumped from teaching posts because of seniority lists; this process has particularly uprooted the black and Hispanic teachers. Doug Nash has only three years of teaching, but he has had time to develop his students.

"I give around 100 homework assignments per year," he said. "I've had kids get high grades on every test, but if they don't do their homework, they don't pass. There are some kids who just don't belong in school. They need other kinds of help."

"And there are others," Mr. Nash said. "Who just don't have respect for teachers. Ten years ago, when I was in junior high, we thought teachers were superior, super-human beings. Not any more."

Mr. Nash said that he would not lower his standards as long as he teaches. How long that will be, he does not know.

Bridge: Two No-Trump Opening Bid Usually Demands Rival Pass

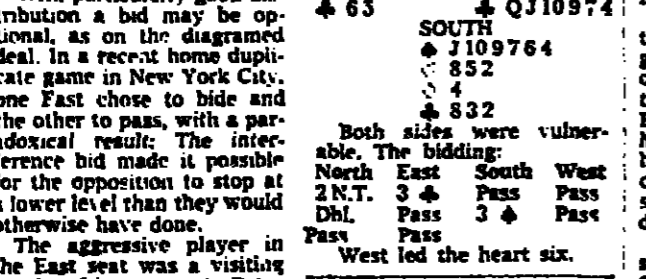

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

If an opponent opens two no-trump, it is reasonable to pass "blind" without inspecting your hand. A player could go for years without having a hand that represents a mandatory action over two no-trump.

With particularly good distribution a bid may be optional, as on the diagrammed deal. The strong South African women's team after bid of three clubs allowed North-South to come to rest in three spades after North had made a balancing double.

A quick trump lead would have beaten three clubs two tricks, but South might have led his singleton diamond after which the defense would have needed to promote the club eight to beat the contract at all.

Heart Six and game, but in the meantime East seized the opportunity to double our clubs. The double had an unfortunate effect on the defense. It diverted West from his normal heart lead to a club lead. That gave South a respite, but his contract was still doomed.

However, South managed to set the opposition a problem. After winning with the club ace, he led the heart king from the dummy. East won with the ace, and it was not clear to him that his partner held a singleton heart. He returned a club to the king, and the defense to take the first six tricks. Notice that after the ace of diamonds has been used to achieve a second heart ruff, East can score the spade queen and West the spade king and the declarer is helpless.

In the replay, East did not bid and South had no way to stop in three spades. Rather than play two no-trump, which was almost sure to be unsatisfactory, South bid three spades, committing the partnership to four spades.

North made a cue-bid of four clubs, promising a spade fit and suggesting a slam. South briskly signed off in

Air Cadets Flexible Code A Strength, Hearing Told

WASHINGTON, June 23—The Superintendent of the United States Air Force Academy said today that an honor code clause allowing for punishment other than expulsion had "strengthened" the code his academy had inherited from West Point.

The superintendent, Lieut. Gen. James R. Allen, who assumed command of the Air Force Academy two years ago, said that permitting discretion in penalties "recognized inexperience, undue pressure, and the fact that an individual can't make a mistake, regret it and be stronger for it."

Testing before the Senate Armed Services Subcommittee on Manpower and Personnel General Allen said that discretion enabled a guilty cadet to exploit

It might, for example, prove possible to transplant into common bacteria the human genes that govern production of the hormone insulin. If successful, this could tremendously simplify the industrial production of insulin for diabetics.

If some of these hypothetical insulin-producing bacteria escaped from the laboratory, however, and infected men and animals, they might do unpredictable global harm.

In answer to questions at the news conference today, Dr. Fredrickson said it was possible to imagine situations involving all manner of potential dangers from recombinant DNA work, but it was not possible now to estimate their probability of occurring. If indeed there was any probability at all.

Monitors Supplanted

The guidelines supplant the monitoring established by the scientists themselves about two years ago and interim recommendations for the research drafted last year at a meeting of scientists in California. The new guidelines are somewhat more strict and considerably more detailed and specific than the earlier interim recommendations, according to scientists at the N.I.H.

At present, there are believed be sterilized before removal; the ventilation system would filter all outgoing air and keep the laboratories at lower pressure than the outside so that no unfiltered air could escape.

The guidelines made public today are the culmination of about three years of intense debate among scientists and some laymen.

At a news conference today, Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson, director of the N.I.H., said that several countries were considering national guidelines to govern research of the same sort and that these were likely to follow closely the guidelines now being issued.

The scientific studies and experiments that have drawn such great international interest in recent years are generally called recombinant DNA research. In these experiments pieces of the genetic material DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) from different species are joined together and transplanted into living cells. With this kind of recombination and transmutation, genes of plants, animals or even man could be grown in bacteria.

Potentially, a living organism such as a bacterium could be given traits and capabilities that it never has in nature.

Dr. Fredrickson said that the techniques were of tremendous potential power and that scientists wanted to use that power in an extremely conservative fashion.

The positive side, scientists have suggested that such research might revolutionize agriculture, the production of drugs and the understanding of many baffling diseases. On the negative side, recombinant DNA experiments might conceivably loose on the world germs more deadly and difficult to control than any produced in nature.

What to Do When Troubled By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

A COMPLETE GUIDE TO THERAPY. From Psychoanalysis to Behavior Modification. By Joel Kovel, M.D. 284 pages. Pantheon, $10.

You can find advice to the troubled of mind in every subway car and on every lamppost. And books explaining how to solve your emotional problems come out at the rate of 365 a year. Why then is Dr. Joel Kovel's "A Complete Guide to Therapy: From Psychoanalysis to Behavior Modification" worth singling out from the thousands of others like it and paying close attention to? First, because Dr. Kovel is a serious man—a practicing psychoanalyst, an associate professor of psychiatry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine and the author of an original and provocative study, "White Racism: A Psychohistory," which was nominated for a 1970 National Book Award in the category of philosophy and religion. Second, Dr. Kovel is not trying to drum up business for himself or proselytizing for his own brand of therapy. True, he admits to a bias, which he characterizes as a mixture of therapeutic conservatism ("I have been engaged in the practice and teaching of Freudian psychoanalysis and psychoanalytic psychotherapy for a number of years.") and political radicalism (he is a pronounced critic of our "mass culture... bounded by capitalist relations").

No Promises Made

Yet in surveying every form of therapy from psychoanalysis to psychodrama, from the existential approach to transactional analysis, Dr. Kovel seems to me to show admirable objectivity and restraint. He makes clear the precise differences in technique between, say, family therapy and group psychotherapy, or between Reichian biofunctionalism and straight sex therapy, and he explains the advantages and disadvantages of each. He gives whatever limited credit he thinks due to such controversial new approaches as encounter groups, TA, and Arthur Janov's Primal Therapy. He never has a kind word or two for Werner Erhard's est and B. F. Skinner's operant conditioning, though the benefits he concedes to each are all but inundated by his censure, which has to do, as does most of the criticisms he levels in this book, with ideological implications.

Third, Dr. Kovel doesn't promise cures, or joy, or ecstasy, or even the possibility of such. He believes that emotional problems arise from neurosis as Freud defined it and that "neurotic functioning consists of a set of imbalances... such that unconscious spheres take destructive control. There are no foreign bodies here, nothing that exists in isolation from anything else, or that can be removed, like a splinter or a bacillus. More, there is no real standard of health that can be appealed to the way a doctor can, for example, measure the progress of a healing fracture by comparing it to the natural form of the bone. For the body lives within nature, which has its own harmonies; but the self lives between nature and history, two spheres that, as you know, often don't get on too well with each other. We cannot therefore conceive of the health of the individual apart from that of the social whole in which he is imbedded—and... there is as yet no therapy that takes more than faltering steps down this path."

Assesses Controversial Issues

Finally, Dr. Kovel gives due attention to the relationship of all therapies to that aforementioned "social whole"—a subject that is too often slighted by supporters of psychiatry, who are wont to claim that questions of emotional stability and its treatment exist exclusively in a therapeutic vacuum. In his "Guide," Dr. Kovel offers many a cool assessment of controversial issues—for instance, that therapy does not necessarily diminish artistic creativity but that there are some circumstances under which it may do so; or that women and other oppressed groups have grounds to complain about their treatment at the hands of therapists but that any abuses they have suffered are not necessarily integral to the institutions of therapy.

But of all the useful points he makes, Dr. Kovel is soundest, it seems to me, in his balanced treatment of the ideological implications of therapy. For while he concedes that every form of therapy runs the risk of demanding conformity to a culture not necessarily worth adjusting to, nevertheless consideration of social values, "including political ideology," should be set aside for the duration of the treatment. For "the truest function of psychoanalysis lies in its capacity to preserve an authentic realm of the imagination." And "although continually modified by real historical circumstances, the force of imagination is in a deep sense transhistorical."

In short, Dr. Kovel's "Guide" can be recommended to everyone—from people looking for help with emotional problems to those with serious questions about the entire business of emotional help. Offhand, I can think of no other guide for which one can make a remotely similar claim.

NAVY AND AIR FORCE SEEK MORE BLACKS

WASHINGTON, June 23 (AP)—The Navy and the Air Force say they plan to recruit blacks until their numbers in the two services are proportionate to the total United States black population of military age.

The two services say they have set percentage objectives shifted to an all-volunteer basis for recruitment of blacks but in early 1973, there have been deny imposing any ceilings. The Navy has set a 12 percent recruitment goal and the Air Force 10 percent.

The Army says, "We will accept any qualified enlistee, regardless of race." But it adds that it has set percentage goals inside the Army to assure equitable distribution of blacks in all career fields.

The Marine Corps replied "no," when asked if it had any numerical objectives for black recruitment. But the corps also said it was against Marine policy to discriminate.

Ever since the armed forces shifted to an all-volunteer basis in early 1973, there have been allegations that the services have tried by various means to hold down the number of blacks in their ranks.

According to the Pentagon's figures, blacks made up only 7.1 percent of Navy personnel as of the end of 1975. At the end of May, the Air Force's black recruit percentage stood at 19.8 percent, which is about the percentage of blacks in the United States.

I Hear America Swinging

"Peter De Vries, America's witty author since Mark Twain, has published another comic novel, and that is no laughing matter. De Vries could sue American life for plagiarism: for 25 years it has imitated his satiric art, which makes his I Hear America Swinging ominous as well as hilarious."—George F. Will, Washington Post

"Mr. De Vries keeps the puns, gags, allusions and word play bouncing like a ping-pong ball on a water-jet, while maintaining an undercurrent of serious comment on our times. You don't laugh yourself silly at a De Vries book; you chuckle yourself a little wiser."
—Richard R. Lingeman, New York Times

"Another in a long line of gifted and sensitive explorations of the way we live... it's all done with the usual De Vries wit and virtuosity, a mastery of language so complete that the whole thing looks easy, perhaps the most dazzling achievement of all. The novel is hilarious."—Charles H. Gold, Chicago Daily News

"I see America Swinging as a continuation of De Vries's 'Dunciad,' proving De Vries to be a master in the true sense: he can show the saddest of us how to laugh; the most ignorant what wisdom is. His writing is magic, humane, graceful, it absolutely sings. The book is pure pleasure, and I have nothing but enthusiasm for it."
—Paul Theroux

"If Peter De Vries needed to prove he is America's best comic novelist now writing, he has done it in this... funny, sad picture of the Bible Belt, unbooked."—Richard Armour, Los Angeles Times

"He has a mischance on a certain kind of twisty, quirky, misbegotten world that's easy to lose your bearings in. And he paints it all in with amazing derring-do, highly charged, bass-ackward sentences that you can't believe he'll emerge from, still having the last word. Much less, the last laugh."—Robert M. Pension Showdown...

The pension reform bill that has been adopted by the Republican-controlled State Senate by an impressive 43-12 margin poses a critical test of the will and ability of New York's dominant Democrats to curtail the back-breaking cost of civil service pensions. Every New York voter must realize by this time that the pensions of state and local employees are threatening bankruptcy not only to the State of New York itself but also to many governmental units within the state, including especially New York City.

With the exception of a deferred implementation date—Jan. 1, 1977—the Senate bill faithfully follows the carefully developed recommendations of the State Pension Commission headed by Otto Kinzel. These recommendations have received strong support from two separate studies by Mayor Beame's Management Advisory (Shinn) Board and the Temporary (McGivern) Commission on City Finances. A fourth study of public pension systems nationwide, conducted by the private Tax Foundation, recently singled out the "lavish retirement plans" in New York City and State as generating "the most conspicuous example of intense concern."

Yet Governor Carey, who as chairman of the Emergency Financial Control Board is responsible for the fiscal integrity of the city as well as the state, has so far failed to take the lead in pressing for pension reform. Mayor Beame has sought to sidestep the challenge posed by the Senate bill by referring this amply studied issue back to the Shinn board.

...Deluding the Public?

Legislative Democrats have attempted to dismiss the Republican-sponsored measure as an "election-year fake." The Assembly majority leader, Albert H. Blumenthal, charged that the bill would actually cost governments money because it includes a cost-of-living escalator for retirees. Manfred Ohrenstein, minority leader in the Senate, denied that his vote against the bill was a vote against pension reform. "I do not want to participate in deluding the public," Mr. Ohrenstein said.

But it is his fellow-Democrats who are deluding the public.

Although the bill would not achieve the ten-year, $2 billion saving claimed by its sponsor, Senator Fred J. Eckert of Rochester, because of the lag in implementation, a Kinzel commission spokesman estimated yesterday that it would save $1.6 billion statewide in the coming decade, including $400 million for New York City alone. Those are savings that this embattled city, which has just been hit with a record 60.8-cent real estate tax increase, cannot afford to pass up. Nor can the state, nor any of its other local governments.

If Democrats are really concerned about insufficient savings in the Eckert bill, let them amend it to make its reforms retroactive to 1973, as in the original Kinzel recommendations. Any attempt to sidetrack the bill, or to weaken it still further, can only be regarded as a sellout of the public interest.

City Fiscal Advance

The new cost-reduction agreements with the city that the Emergency Financial Control Board announced yesterday represent a substantial advance toward the joint goals of a realistic 1977 municipal budget and a successful three-year drive to a balanced budget.

Although City Hall did not meet all of the demands for accelerated economies outlined three weeks ago by the Control Board's executive director, Stephen Berger, the schedule of new cuts and standby reductions should provide ample protection against slippages in the new budget.

In agreeing to submit a complete reduction program for fiscal 1978 by next Jan. 1 and to have all of the proposed reductions in place by the following July, the city has gone considerably beyond Mr. Berger's request in the area, signaling an encouraging sense of seriousness and purpose in City Hall.

Limited progress was registered on the touchy issue of court costs. The E.F.C.B. statement called for this burden to be "assumed as expeditiously as possible by the state in a manner consistent with the integrity of state and local governments." This is an area where Governor Carey's good faith and leadership will be tested.

The most serious remaining threat to the budget and the financial plan comes from the still unresolved negotiations with municipal unions. The Control Board is expected shortly to reaffirm its wage guidelines handed down in the transit talks, requiring that any pay boost be tied to productivity gains.

Our own view, as stated previously, is that elimination of excessive fringe benefits offers the fairest and most reliable means of offsetting a modest cost-of-living increase, which is the most the city can offer in its present circumstances.

In Martian Orbit

United States space scientists have scored a perfect interplanetary bull's-eye again with the punctual arrival of Viking 1 in the neighborhood of Mars and its entry into Martian orbit. Difficult as that feat was across distances of hundreds of millions of miles, the primary task of the Viking spaceship still lies ahead.

That task is to do on-site research in exobiology, the science that attempts to study extraterrestrial life and therefore implicitly assumes such life exists somewhere out in the vast universe. The Viking 1 lander, scheduled to touch Martian soil on July 4, is the world's first automated biological laboratory created to try to detect signs of life on another planet.

Even before twentieth-century fiction writers had embroidered the idea of life on Mars, scientists had given it respectability. First there was Giovanni Schiaparelli, the Italian astronomer who reported in 1877 that he had seen canali—straight lines or channels that might have been man-made—on Mars. Schiaparelli's most distinguished follower was the American, Percival Lowell, who devoted much of his life to propagating the idea that the network of canals indicated a highly complex civilization.

The canals of which Schiaparelli and Lowell wrote are now known to have been illusions; yet the actual Martian topography is in some ways even more remarkable than were the dreams of these pioneers.

Nobody expects the Viking 1 lander to photograph a descendant of Edgar Rice Burroughs' hero, John Carter, walking across the Martian terrain. In all truth the probability of finding trace of life on Mars is exceedingly small. But the probability is not zero and life on Mars is not impossible. Perhaps the question will be finally resolved by Viking 1 in the weeks ahead.

Hitting the Beaches

The blight that has been closing the beaches on the South Shore of Long Island is a grave reminder—like the Torrey Canyon and Santa Barbara Channel and Teton Dam disasters—that an abused environment will sooner or later take its toll.

Neither governmental agencies nor independent scientists have so far clearly established the source of the sludge, garbage and other debris that have washed up on eighty miles of ocean front in Nassau and Suffolk Counties. Without that knowledge, they obviously can offer no immediate remedy. Along with the rest of us, they can only hope that unusual currents caused by a freakishly prolonged period of southwesterly winds will soon shift and carry their noxious freight out to sea.

But the people of the metropolitan area will rightly demand a governmental concern emphatically deeper and more far-reaching than that.

There are questions here that go to the very heart of New York's future. Not least among the urgent considerations are these:

• In spite of the increasing number of treatment plants, 40 million gallons of raw sewage a day are still poured into metropolitan waters.

• Sludge is the other major factor. Since sludge is a byproduct of water-treatment, won't still more plants, now contemplated, mean still more sludge?

• Could that sludge be better disposed of as land-fill—and where?

• Would its use as compost be the best means of disposing of this waste, while at the same time providing a cheap and nonchemical fertilizer? Or is there a danger to soil and water from certain metals that remain in sludge, no matter how thorough the treatment?

Such grave technical questions just might be answered by the combined efforts of the Environmental Protection Agency, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the National Science Foundation. They have not been answered yet. There is not even a consistent monitoring system to locate sources of contamination and to give warning.

The one good that can come from the noxious tide that has assaulted the region's beaches is that people throughout the metropolitan area will at last have been alerted to the truth that the cause of the environment is the cause of all. The beaches of the Hamptons have suddenly become more dangerous than Coney Island's. The shopkeepers of Atlantic Beach have had it driven home that a clean environment is no longer a cause for dreamy fanatics but the very stuff of business. Gains, yes; but at what a price.

Mr. Ford on Equality

In his public attacks on the "intrusion" by the courts into school busing, President Ford made the statement that "the principle of racial equality is indelibly written into our Constitution and into our hearts, and in all that we do we must honor it."

The President seems to hold a romanticized view of American history. Was the principle of racial equality "indelibly" written either into the Constitution or the nation's hearts when slavery enjoyed official sanction? Or when, after emancipation, the Supreme Court in 1856 in Plessy v. Ferguson proclaimed "separate but equal" as the law that governed access to drinking fountains, railway stations—and schools? Or when fleets of school buses daily carried white children past black schools in order to uphold segregation?

Where was the principle in Representative Gerald Ford's heart in the years when he so frequently voted against civil rights legislation? Is the exploitation of the busing issue in a political campaign the way to "honor" the principle of equality?

Surely, even Mr. Ford must know that it was only after decades of courageous litigation that the Supreme Court in 1954 unanimously overturned Plessy. But what indignation was there that the principle of racial equality was thereupon written in America's hearts? For another decade, minimal progress was made in compliance with the Court's order to desegregate "with all deliberate speed." It was not "indelible" dedication to social justice that ultimately achieved action on desegregation; that was to be left to the Civil Rights Act approved by Congress in the Johnson Administration.

Mr. Ford ought to remember that it was Congress that enacted the laws which the courts are now enforcing. One can reasonably disagree over specific techniques used to attain desegregation or question the efficacy of busing in certain situations. But to disregard the nature of the struggle and to pretend that equality will easily and automatically triumph is an affront both to those who have been and continue to be victims of discrimination and to those many Americans who have been battling and continue to battle for equal rights for their fellow citizens.

Lebanon: The Silent Onlookers

To the Editor:

Recurring most frequently in reports on the tragic war in Lebanon has been the word "religious." Yet conspicuously silent seem to have been the voices of the foremost leaders of the Moslem, Druse and Christian denominations for a cessation of the killing.

I do not recall public proposals by a meeting of representatives of the various groups that would seek to transcend the religious differences and to arrive at some sort of modus vivendi and salvage what is left of the people and resources of Lebanon. On previous occasions we have heard calls for a jihad, or holy war. Why can't the religious leadership unite in a plea for a holy peace?

Also comparatively silent has been the United Nations. Apparently accepting the early conviction, fiction of a "civil war," the U.N. has manifested little visible evidence of any initiative to end the shootings, shelling and bombings.

The "civil war" has escalated into a full war, marked by growing intervention by non-Lebanese sources. One wonders why the Lebanese representative to the U.N. has been reluctant or unable, or hindered from efforts, to bring this situation to the attention of the Security Council. And we are speaking of a supposedly sovereign, independent state that was among the original member states of the U.N. on Oct. 24, 1945.

Prominent in the fighting have been various Palestinian groups, both those within Lebanon and those from and/or backed by some other Arab countries. In their statements regarding their right to nationhood, these groups have described their homeland as located in the territories of Israel and Jordan.

Lebanon obviously does not fall within the boundaries of either of these two Middle East countries. Yet these Palestinian groups have been permitted to play such a major role in the struggle for domination and in "the slaughter of the innocents."

A recent Times story listed the number of killed in Lebanon as 27,000, with an equal number of wounded, for a total of 54,000 casualties in a country of about 2.8 million. Translating this figure into American population dimensions, one comes up with the shocking total of 3,740,000 casualties. So, one wonders how it has happened that a state and its people, with their long history, rich cultural background and beautiful natural setting, have been permitted to suffer rape, ravage and ruin.

Education and Gadgets

To the Editor:

My reaction to your June 13 Week in Review article on "Classroom Revolution: Computer Interaction" is a nervous yawn. The breathless announcement of a new "age" in education ushered in by a new gadget has become an act that has some tough acts to follow.

Anyone who has had anything to do with schools in the more or less recent past can remember the rash promises made for programmed instructional devices, language laboratories, video recorders and other shiny trinkets pushed by various manufacturers eager to make a dollar. The problem was not that these items didn't work reasonably well but that the ballyhoo that accompanied their introduction worked too well. This talk about a computer revolution sounds like more of the same.

The overenthusiasm of the salesmen is understandable, but educators and writers on education should temper their own in public statements. Whenever a great deal of money is spent and magnificent promises are made as to scholastic outcome, a potential boomerang has been launched. Public resentment of large expenditures on gimmicky that doesn't work as super-

S. 1: Who Is Spreading Misinformation?

To the Editor:

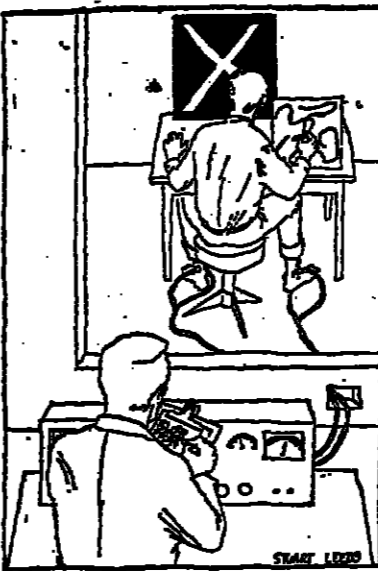

In his June 11 letter, Richard Thornburgh, an Assistant Attorney General, accused both The Times and the American Civil Liberties Union of contributing to the "multiplication of misinformation and misimpression" about Senate Bill 1, the criminal code bill. Mr. Thornburgh's allegation is impressive; his accuracy is not.

Who is spreading misinformation? Mr. Thornburgh claims that S. 1 improves existing law because incitement to riot would only be punishable if a riot in fact results. That is simply untrue. S. 1 has an attempt section (§1001) which, when applied to the riot provision, would punish incitement which produces no violent activity. The Senate Draft Report (p. 841) itself points this out.

"Riot incitement activity that is merely inchoate in nature may be punishable, however, under the general attempt, conspiracy, and solicitation sections of the proposed code." "Attempted incitement" carries the same penalty, up to three years' imprisonment, as does actually causing a riot by incitement.

Mr. Thornburgh also states, misleadingly, that S. 1 would not punish "purely private transactions" in obscene materials between consenting adults. What he must mean are gratuitous transfers of such materials; a sale even to a willing adult remains an offense, as does importation for personal use.

He also argues that §1302, which punishes with up to one year imprisonment any person who "obstructs or impairs a government function by means of physical interference or obstacle," will not interfere with protected First Amendment demonstration activities. If that is his understanding of this section, then we welcome him to join us in urging the Senate to adopt more specific language defining what—and what is not—intended to be covered by this section.

lately as expected is a dangerous emotion to court these days. Perhaps computers are fun, perhaps they may even do what salesmen and school officials with vested interests say they will do. But past experience contraindicates hasty capital expenditures accompanied by a great deal of fanfare. Let's keep this "revolution" under control.

A Path to G.O.P. Unity

To the Editor:

In a two-man contest for the nomination, one must clearly win, and on the first ballot. With a minority party, the question is whether the victory will have been so divisive as to be worth anything.

This minority party has, when unified, done very well in recent Presidential elections. If a Ford-Reagan ticket were either unacceptable in some way or unbelievable, there remains only one way for the Republicans to unify. The possibility of another candidate acceptable to both sides should be considered now. Such an approach would immediately neutralize the pre-campaign advantage now held by the Democrats.

Ford for Vice President?

To the Editor:

President Ford has been asked by reporters whether, if he wins the nomination over former Governor Reagan, he will consider Mr. Reagan as a Vice-Presidential candidate. Mr. Ford's answer has been that he will not rule out Mr. Reagan.

Nowhere, however, have I read of a question to Mr. Reagan as to whether, if he is the nominee, he will consider Mr. Ford as his running mate. A preposterous question? I don't think so.

Celebrating 200, al Frisco

By Herb Coen

SAN FRANCISCO—This may come as a surprise to effete Easterners, but a Bicentennial is being celebrated, if that is the word, at this less-civilized end of the nation, too. However, ours is as different from yours as day from night, East from West, or, to be perfectly blunt, liberty from enslavement.

For, while the East Coast is observing the 200th anniversary of our deliverance from the British tyrant, we San Franciscans are saluting the 200th anniversary of the arrival of Spanish imperialism in the form of the Church (the establishment of Mission Dolores) and Military (the Presidio).

This latter event, which has stirred the city to its shallows, took place on June 27, 1776. But by squinting a little into the setting sun, it is possible to stretch that date to July 4. After all, it must have taken the newly arrived Spanish a few days to unpack and meet the Indians, no easy trick without the help of Marlon Brando. Thus, what we are celebrating here, while you are going mad with excitement there, is called officially the Twin Bicentennial, a rather unwieldy term.

I have suggested Twincennial and even Baycentennial to no avail. At this point, most of us are ready to settle for Bahcentennial. In any case, and on either Coast, it seems as though this silliness has been going on for at least 200 years without really getting started. The only thing worse is the possibility it may never end.

Actually San Francisco blew the Twincennial, or whatever, back on Aug. 6, 1975, a day that marked the 200th anniversary of the arrival of the first European ship in the Bay. That was the good ship San Carlos, skippered by the Duke of Aragon and the Toast of Castille, Capt. Juan Manuel de Ayala. This Bicentennial event could have been a dazzler, with dancing on the waterfront, an Ayala look-alike contest, to have been won by Ricardo Montalban, and some memorial polluting of the Bay.

Instead the great day almost slipped by. A motorboat done up as a Spanish
"galleon sailed through the Gate and dropped anchor on the last surviving Dungeness crab. Sailing out to meet and greet the ersatz Conquistadores were several intrepid white clubmen painted like Indians and rowing reed canoes that sank with no loss of life.
Thus was Captain Ayala's mighty feat observed.

It might be noted here that it has not been easy to get the local Indian community to cooperate in commemorating the arrival of the Catholic Church. The more militant insist that Father Junipero Serra, who founded the chain of California missions, including San Francisco's, converted the Indians—by stern, if not downright cruel methods, such as cutting their Achilles tendons so they couldn't run away. On their side, the Spanish insist the Indians were a shifty lot who tried to sell them the former New York Giants and the Golden Gate Bridge.

Today, Father Serra is a freeway—
the ultimate California tribute.
Between us, the reason there is so much boredom here about the Bahcentennial is that deep down inside, we know, San Francisco wasn't born any 200 years ago. In fact, the village then was called Yerba Buena, or "Good Herb," and didn't have a single decent bar. San Francisco improper, as we like to think of it, was born in 1846, when Commodore Sloat sailed in with a United States naval force, raised the American flag and gave the city its present name.

As far as celebrations are concerned, it's the Gold Rush of 1849-50 that still turned people on here, or the great fire and earthquakes of April 18, 1906,
San Francisco's real golden age.
For all its Victorian houses and cultural pretensions, this is a young city no more than a century old in metropolitan terms.

There is a nice irreverence toward the doctrine of the separation of the races has brought peace and concord to South Africa?

Do you as Christians believe that the poor should pay for the poor, that you should spend between 400 rands and 500 rands a year on the education of each white child, and between 30 rands and 40 rands on each black child? [Editor's note: One rand is worth $1.15.]

Do you as Christians believe that white industry should be maintained at the cost of the integrity of black family life?

Do you believe that you can move away from racial discrimination until you repeal discriminatory laws?

There are other questions, but these are enough.
The blame does not lie wholly with the Nationalist Government. It lies with us all. The English-speaking people are also responsible.

But the greater portion of the blame, and the greater portion of the responsibility, lies with the Nationalist Party. They have the power. They are the ones who have exalted law and order above justice. And by law and order they mean that kind of law and order which keeps them in power.

I am not going to suggest what our rulers should do now. They are intelligent enough to know, even if they are at the moment psychologically incapacitated. I shall ask one question

a great responsibility lies on you. But if you regard yourself as first and last an Afrikaner, you will not save our country. You will not even save Afrikanerdom.

You must be able to transcend your racial origins in a time of crisis, such as this—undoubtedly is. Instead of declaring that you are determined to maintain law and order, could you not assure us that you are determined to find out—without prejudgment—why law and order have broken down, and to put the wrong things right?

After repentance comes amendment of life.

Alan Paton, South African novelist, has long been a critic of his country's racial policies. This article, which appeared in The Johannesburg Star, was made available by The Associated Press.

The Boston Affair

By William V. Shannon

BOSTON, June 23—No one who knows this city's public schools would dispute the finding of Federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. that some de jure segregation existed here. And no one of goodwill would reject his moral goal of a school system that provided an integrated quality education for every child.

But between a finding of fact and the attainment of a moral goal there stretches the long, winding road that the policymaker must travel. Initiative, maneuver and compromise are necessary for a safe, successful journey. Patience and a sense of timing are essential if stubborn facts are to yield to new ideals. Prudence is the required practical virtue.

Normally in a free society, policy is made by an elected legislator or executive. Because he periodically seeks election, such a policymaker must, in Edmund Burke's words, "live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents.
Their wishes ought to have great weight with him, their opinion high respect; their business unremitting attention."

When complicated social issues pass into the hands of a judge, however, another atmosphere prevails. A judge does not feel the pulse and pressure of a community. He sits in isolation.
In formulating solutions, he need only consult "the law," an abstraction that can encompass a good many of his own unchallenged predilections.

"Once a right and a violation have been shown, the scope of a district court's equitable powers to remedy past wrongs is broad, for breadth and flexibility are inherent in equitable remedies," the Supreme Court has observed.

A judge may ignore unintended consequences, disruptive side-effects, and counterbalancing social costs in the single-minded pursuit of a remedy for the wrong he has discerned. If his objective, for example, is to rearrange the seating of the audience, he is free to shout "Fire!" in a crowded theater because that may be the fastest way to get everybody out of their seats.

It is to these intellectual temptations that Judge Garrity has yielded in his management of the Boston school busing case. Like most Northeastern cities, Boston's schools were somewhat segregated because of housing patterns, Boston's elected School Committee, the sad, captive instrument of demagogues, overlaid on this pattern of de facto segregation a further series of actions—such as the siting of newly constructed schools and the grouping of elementary schools that feed into particular high schools—designed to strengthen natural segregative tendencies.

Inspecting these ham-fisted practices, Judge Garrity had no difficulty in finding de jure segregation. Rather than identifying these specific segregative practices and reversing them, Judge Garrity showed a zeal and an ambition that might be admirable in an executive but are suspect in a judge. He chose to try not only for immediate, almost total integration but also for a comprehensive reform of the whole deteriorated, politics-ridden school system. Not content with rearranging attendance zones and feeder patterns, he also opted for the one strategy that promised a quick payoff: busing on a large scale.

Boston has lived for two years with the consequences of that reckless course. This old, proud, poor, much-loved city has been tormented by racial hate, by needless fear and anxiety, by violence and the threat of violence. Truancy has soared. White flight has accelerated. Racial incidents have multiplied. Any serious teaching in some high schools has virtually stopped for weeks at a time.

And all to what purpose? It is not as if black youths were being transported to splendid schools. South Boston High, one of the centers of resistance, would never be mistaken for Groton. In a recent year, out of a graduating class of 418, it sent only 85 to college. Poor blacks have been shuffled together with poor whites, achieving little except change for the sake of change.

The Boston Latin Schools afford another example of judicial arbitrariness.
These two schools are the glories of an otherwise ramshackle system. The creation of Boston's Yankee past, the Latin Schools have opened the doors to higher learning for generations of Irish, Jewish and Italian children.

Busing is not an issue because these are citywide schools with admission by rigorous examination. Segregation in any true sense is not an issue either because each of the schools has had approximately a hundred black students in recent years, or between 7 and 9 percent of the total.
Because that figure did not correspond with the percentage of black children in the system as a whole, however, Judge Garrity decreed that the test scores had to be disregarded and that henceforth 35 percent of the entering class had to be composed of minority students, presumably whether or not they were as qualified as the white children excluded to make room for them.

Could there be an act more racially provocative or better calculated to divide black and white parents? Can such manipulation be defended as merely the neutral working of the law?

Divestiture: blueprint for disaster

What would oil industry dismemberment do? It could hurt you five ways.

- 1. It would hurt the consumer. Says economics professor Neil H. Jacoby of U.C.L.A.: "Prices of petroleum products would rise, product improvements would diminish, and services would shrink. Consumers would suffer, and the social consequences would be adverse as well." Says Don Paarlberg, economist for the Department of Agriculture: "Disruption caused by divestiture would impact not only at the farm level, but on through the economy."
- 2. It might raise taxes. Listen to banker Raymond B. Gary of Morgan Stanley & Co.: "The price for enacting such legislation will have to be paid by someone—if not by the consumer... then certainly by the taxpayer: either prices will have to be raised... or the Federal Government will have to step in, with programs of guarantees, insurance, or even direct subsidies."
- 3. It would help foreign producing countries at U.S. expense. A New York Times editorial explains why: "Breaking up the largest oil companies—and the long period of uncertainty through which the industry would have to pass—would probably cause a major cutback in investment in new energy resources, both in the United States and abroad (including non-OPEC areas). This would strengthen market domination by OPEC [Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries] by contracting other sources of supply."

4. It could cost jobs. That's the prediction of John Winger of the Chase Manhattan Bank: "... if a lack of energy prevented any further growth in the GNP, we could, by 1985, expect unemployment that would exceed that of the 1930s."
5. It would weaken America's security. Our authority for that? Roger E. Shields, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, who says: "... the bill would be highly detrimental to the nation's security and its defense..."
Isn't it time for the Senators who are trying to break up a vital industry to listen to voices of reason? Including the experts? Including, we hope, yours. Write your Senators. Let them know that you think divestiture is bad news for America.

In this space last week, we said that the divestiture concept in Senate Bill 2387 was supported by only two of some 80 non-government witnesses at the subcommittee hearings. That should have been 51 non-government witnesses, if you count only principal witnesses (and not experts who accompanied the principals and may or may not have spoken). But we stand by the substance of our message. Of the 51, analysis of the testimony shows only two supported the full-divestiture concept embodied in the bill. We repeat what we said last week: the committee vote for divestiture totally disregarded the weight of evidence.

All's Immensity Overwhelms Art Works

By HILTON KRAMER

emporary painting and sculpture does not lend itself to the grandeur of the Albany Mall's immensity.

As for looking at all this art, the urgent task of any sensible person caught in this underground concourse is to find the nearest exit—no easy matter, by the way.

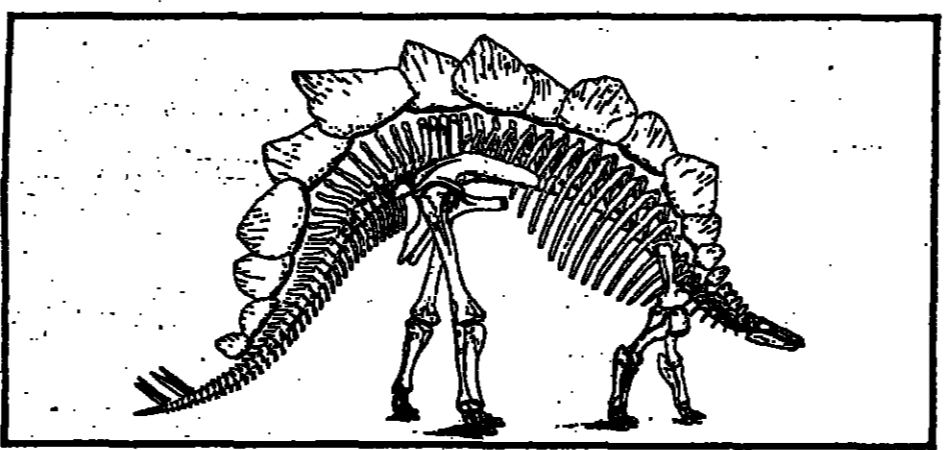

The commission that selected the paintings and sculptures for Albany consisted of Wallace K. Harrison, the chairman, and Seymour H. Knox, Dorothy C. Miller, Robert M. Doty and the late René d'Harnoncourt (who served until his death in 1968).

Stegosaurus May Have Had Air-Conditioner Eons Before Man

By BOYCE RENSBERGER

The bony plates on the back of the Stegosaurus, the 20-foot-long dinosaur, served as both armor and fins for dissipating excess body heat, three Yale experts suggest.

The two rows of bony plates sticking out of the arched back of the Stegosaurus, a species of dinosaur familiar to most small boys, could have functioned not only as armor, as is the conventional explanation, but as fins for a natural air-conditioning system, according to three Yale University scientists.

Aspects of the plates is that they are arranged contrary to the principle of bilateral symmetry, which generally stipulates that the left side of an animal is a mirror image of the right side.

Lon Warneke, 67, Dies; Hurlled for Cubs, Cards

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., June 23 (AP) — Lon Warneke, the former National League pitcher and umpire, died today of an apparent heart attack at his home. He was 67 years old.

Warneke was an outstanding pitcher for the Chicago Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals during the 1930's and early 1940's. He closed his baseball career by umpiring for 10 years in the National League.

Warneke entered the race for Garland County Judge as an independent in November, 1962 and was elected. He served for 10 years and then retired for health reasons.

He is survived by his wife, a son and a daughter and three brothers.

Arkansas Hummingbird

Lonnie Warneke, born March 28, 1909, in Mount Ida, Ark., was nicknamed the "Arkansas Hummingbird" during his playing days by Roy Stockton, a St. Louis sports writer for what Stockton described as Warneke's "stitching and darting form of delivery."

In 1932 the right-handed pitcher won 22 games and lost 6 for the Chicago Cubs. He was the National League's only 20-game winner that year, and he also led the league in earned run average with 2.37, beating out Carl Hubbell of the New York Giants, who had a 2.50 E.R.A. Warneke was voted the league's outstanding pitcher.

The Cubs won the pennant that year but lost the World Series, 4 games to 0, with Warneke losing the second game. He also posted 23 victories in 1934, and in 1935 when he won 20, the Cubs again got into the World Series. This time he won two games against the Detroit Tigers, but the Tigers took the Series, 4-2.

Those two mound victories in 1935 series were among Warneke's proudest moments. After he was shut out by the Tigers, 3-0, on four hits in the next three games, but Warneke came back and kept the Cubs in the series by beating the Tigers, 3-1, in the fifth game.

Warneke performed a rare feat that not many other pitchers in the record books have done: he pitched a no-hit game on Aug. 10, 1941, against the Cincinnati Reds while with the Cardinals. The Reds were the defending World Series champions that year.

LAURENCESALISBURY WAS A U.S. DIPLOMAT

Laurence Estlin Salisbury, a former career Foreign Service officer, died yesterday at the Watrous Nursing Home in Madison, Conn. He was 82.

Mr. Salisbury was assistant chief, division of Far Eastern affairs for the State Department when he retired in December 1941. He had spent most of his professional life in the Far East.

Born in 1884 in Chicago, Mr. Salisbury attended the University of Chicago High School before enrolling in the University from which he earned a Ph.D. in 1916.

He first went abroad in that year—to Japan as a teacher of English. He later joined the Warneke was selected by John McGraw as one of his pitching aces in the first All-Star Game in Comiskey Park, Chicago, on July 6, 1933, and appeared in the annual event several times.

Warneke retired in 1945 after 14 full seasons in the National League with a record of 16 or more victories a season eight times and a career mark of 193 victories and 121 defeats.

During his 10-year umpiring career in the National League, he was once described by another umpire, Dusty Bogges, as a "player's umpire." Warneke, who had been put out of a game only once as a player, boasted he had not found it necessary to eject a player. He usually let them speak their piece.

"I've always got along pretty well with umpires," he said. "I figured most of them were in the game for the same reasons I was — because they liked baseball and because they wanted to make a living."

Warneke was the same as other players, and if they made mistakes and booed one now and then, they were only human.

Albany Maneuver Links 2 Nassau-City Tax Bills

ALBANY, June 23—In a classed-in-it, removing the Nassau County sales tax from the Albany City sales tax, the Albany City Council today voted to accept a measure to increase the Nassau County sales tax by tying the increase to a tax measure vital to New York City.

The Senators thus set the stage for the long-running controversy over the Nassau County levy to break into the open after several false starts. Ralph G. Caso, who has become part of the last ditch legislative bargaining as the lawmakers struggle to adjourn this week or next.

The sales-tax battle took shape this afternoon as the Senate approved 47 to 6 a bill embodying two tax measures: the increase in the Nassau County sales tax and an extension of the Albany City sales tax.

There is no disagreement over New York City's need to extend its current sales tax, which the Democratic-controlled Assembly approved a couple weeks ago. The sales tax in the city is 8 percent, 4 percent city plus 4 percent State.

But by today's action—almost inevitable product of down-to-the-wire legislative politics—the Senate is simply trying to get the Assembly to drop their opposition to a 6-cent tax for Nassau County.

Mr. Kremer said that the Democrats' strategy would be to receive the Senate bill and was the only way before us.

The atmosphere in the Senate was thick with political charges and countercharges while the tax bill was being debated.

Senator Karen S. Burstein, a Democrat, tried unsuccessfully to put the bill into two separate bills—an attempt that prompted Republicans to charge that she was simply playing politics with a Nassau County tax measure that has the solid support of its home executive and legislative branches.

"I know it looks terribly political," Mrs. Burstein said of her opposition to the bill, after her amendment was defeated.

"The fact is that lots of other bills have been held hostage to the Senate is simply trying to get the Assembly to drop their opposition to a 6-cent tax for Nassau County.

Her opposition failed to dislodge fellow Democrats from the Nassau tax opposition, voting in favor of the tax—Mr. Kremer and his seven colleagues from both Nassau and Suffolk counties have so far lone measure. "What could stood united and prevailed on?" Speaker Stanley Steingut to Ohrenstein, the Democratic minority leader, remarked after the vote. "We had to get the city sales tax passed and this was the only way before us."

RITES SET TODAY FOR MAURICE SAGE

Jewish National Fund Head Died After Group Dinner

Funeral services for Dr. Maurice S. Sage, president of the Jewish National Fund of America, who suffered a fatal heart attack Tuesday night at the organization's dinner at the New York Hilton Hotel, will be held today at 12:15 at the Fifth Avenue Synagogue, 5 East 62d Street.

Minutes before the 59-year-old Jewish leader was stricken, he had introduced Betty Ford to a gathering of 2,500 persons in the grand ballroom.

As efforts were made to revive Dr. Sage, Mrs. Ford stepped to the microphone and asked those present to "bow our heads for a moment and say a prayer for Rabbi Sage."

The audience rose and Mrs. Ford gave a spontaneous prayer lasting about two minutes in a trembling but determined voice.

Mrs. Ford spoke yesterday by telephone with Mrs. Sage to express condolences to the Sages and with President Ford and Mrs. Ford to express their sympathy.

Dr. Sage, a chemist and president of the Sage Laboratory, held many patents in the chemical field. He was president of the Religious Zionists of America from 1972 to 1975.

The 50-a-plate dinner Tuesday night was the initial step in a campaign to raise $6 million for an American Bicentennial National Park in the Judean Mountains, 25 miles outside of Jerusalem.

He had been associated with the Jewish National Fund at first as a treasurer and later in major executive posts. Two years ago he was elected president of the fund, which is the land development arm of the world Zionist movement.

Born in Russia, Dr. Sage and his family migrated to Paris where he was ordained as a rabbi at the Rabbinical Seminary in Paris. Dr. Sage's father was a chief rabbi of Paris. The younger Sage later graduated from the Faculty of Science of the University of Paris. During his stay in France the French Government cited him with the Legion d'Honneur Educational.

In World War II Dr. Sage served with the French Army and escaped from Nazi-occupied France to the United States where he served in the United States Army.

Among Jewish philanthropic organizations Dr. Sage had been active were the Jewish National Fund, which is the land development arm of the world Zionist movement; the Israel Bond Organization, and the United Jewish Appeal.

Dr. Sage, who lived at 200 Central Park South, is survived by his wife, the former Lillian Gelfand; two sons, Martin and Malcolm, and a daughter, Ann Alper.

The funeral services will be held by Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, the body will be temporarily interred in New York City and later taken to Israel for burial.

A. Wesley Barthelmes Jr. Dies; Aided Democrats in Congress

WASHINGTON, June 23—A. Wesley Barthelmes Jr., a former newspaperman who for 14 years was an aide to Democratic members of Congress, including the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy, died last night at his home in Bethesda, Md. He was a native of Winchester, Mass.

Mr. Barthelmes, who was 54 years old, underwent surgery on a brain tumor two months ago.

He served in the Army in World War II, parachuting into Normandy behind enemy lines on D-Day, June 6, 1944.

A graduate of Tufts University and the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism, Mr. Barthelmes worked as a reporter and editor for the Worcester Telegram and Gazette and the Washington Post. A strong supporter of the Newspaper Guild, Mr. Barthelmes was president of its Washington office in 1953.

Dr. Maurice S. Sage

Dr. Sage, who lived at 200 Central Park South, is survived by his wife, the former Lillian Gelfand; two sons, Martin and Malcolm, and a daughter, Ann Alper.

The funeral services will be held by Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, the body will be temporarily interred in New York City and later taken to Israel for burial.

From 1962 until earlier this year, he worked for Representative Edith Green of Oregon; Senator Kennedy, as press secretary; Representative Richard Bolling of Missouri, whom he helped in the writing of two books; Senator Frank Church of Idaho, and most recently, Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware.

Until earlier this year, Mr. Barthelmes wrote the "Washington Report" column for Commonweal magazine under the pen name Sisyphus.

In 1970-74, Mr. Barthelmes served as a member of the Democratic central committees of Maryland and Montgomery County.

JUDGE AUSTIN HOYT; ON U.S. TAX COURT

WASHINGTON, June 23—Austin Hoyt, a retired judge of the United States Tax Court here, died Monday at the Mary Washington Hospital in Fredericksburg, Va. He was 61 years old.

Judge Hoyt, who lived at Prospect Hill, Caroline County, Va., was appointed to the Tax Court in 1962. He retired in 1973.

He attended the University of Alabama and St. John's University and received his law degree from the University of Virginia. After practicing law in Beacon, N.Y., where he was born, he served as an attorney with the Rural Electrification Administration and the antitrust and criminal divisions of the Department of Justice. From 1946 to 1949 he also served as special assistant to the Attorney General.

He then moved to Colorado Springs, where he practiced law until 1959, when he was appointed a district judge for the Fourth Judicial District of Colorado.

Judge Hoyt is survived by his wife, the former Margaret Carter; two daughters, one son and five grandchildren.

Abraham Arfe, President Of Apparel Company, 60

Abraham Arfe, president of United Super Apparel Inc., Ridgefield, N.J., and long active in Jewish religious and philanthropic endeavors, died Sunday in Beth Israel Hospital after a short illness. Mr. Arfe, who lived at 500 Grand Street on Lower East Side, was 60 years old.

There was a funeral procession of more than 1,000 people after services Monday at the Church, Brooklyn. Burial will be at the United States National Cemetery, Willets Street.

Mr. Arfe was on the board of governors of Bialystoker Synagogue. He served as vice chairman of the Cooperative Village Division of United Jewish Appeal, 50 West 40th Street, a philanthropic and was a patron of several stores, including the Washington University Hospital and the Mesvita Tifereth in Washington, Tuesday after suffering a heart attack May 30. His age was 62.

Survivors include his wife, Margaret Cohill Gottardi, and three brothers.

Advertising Executive Dies In Coast Helicopter Crash

Raymond Fragasso, a vice president of the J. Walter Thompson Company and head of broadcast production for JWT New York, was killed Tuesday in a helicopter crash while scouting locations to film commercials near Bishop, Calif. Mr. Fragasso, who lived in Rye, N.Y., was 42 years old.

Mr. Fragasso, a native New Yorker, studied civil engineering at City College and began his career in television advertising with Lennen and Newell before joining J. Walter Thompson in 1960.

Man, 25, Is Shot to Death by Police in Fight in Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel

He was in a car next to the commandeered car being treated for shock.

PERLMUTTER

Seeing the police car yesterday in a battle with officers in Brooklyn-Battery tunnel, the suspect was shot. The second was slain. The suspect later slain in another car and to the head of the tunnel. He then fired officers through window, exchanging shots with them before he halted scores of people near the end of the tunnel. He had been taken from a car in front of the tunnel. A car in front of the tunnel was commandeered by the suspect. The car in which the man was identified as Savastano, 25-years-old, was stolen yesterday in Manhattan. The chase started at about 11:30 p.m. when the men in the stolen car pulled out of a lane on the Belt Parkway in Brooklyn. A motorcycle police officer, Stephen Sadler, saw the car on weapons and gave chase.

Above: Robert Savastano being treated after he was shot by police officers in the Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel. Left: The man whose car was commandeered being given oxygen after the shootout ended.

The car went through a tollgate and into the tunnel, with Officer Sadler in pursuit. In the meantime, James Byrne, a tunnel officer, alerted officers at the Manhattan end to block the tunnel. The car was halted by a traffic jam, and Mr. Savastano jumped out. He was stopped by Officer Sadler, who tried to handcuff him. But the suspect pulled out a .25-caliber pistol and fired a shot. It narrowly missed Detective John Lyons, of the Manhattan District Attorney's office, who had jumped out of his car to assist Officer Sadler. Mr. Savastano got into a car occupied by Stanley Miller and ordered him to drive ahead, threatening him with his gun. When Mr. Miller said that the car in front was halted, the suspect shouted at the occupants of the car—John Lekas and his wife, Joanna—and threatened to shoot.

In the car with Mr. and Mrs. Lekas was their year-old daughter. When Mr. Savastano saw that he could not escape because of the stalled cars, he shot at Officer Sadler and Detective Lyons, who were shooting at him from the rear. Mr. Savastano was shot to death. His companion, Mr. Maldonado, was captured in the stolen car by Robert Prader, an off-duty police officer.

A Child Whose World Is Hospital Ward

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD Jr.

Jack has lived at Kings County Hospital since he was 2 years old. And although he is almost 7 now, he wouldn't know summer from winter, rain from snow or day from night. His vocabulary is small. And he has no clothes of his own; even if he did, he would not know what to do with them. Jack is one of a number of children — nobody seems to know how many—for whom hospital wards have become home although they do not require medical treatment. Sometimes they are like Jack: They go to a hospital for a physiological problem that may or may not involve a mental disorder. But for a variety of reasons they remain at the institutions, languishing in wards ill suited for handling their problems. Meanwhile, the children fail to develop intellectually.

form to allow the hospital to place the child in another facility better equipped to treat his problem," Miss Cerminaro said. "So he has been in the hospital ever since, and because he now thinks of his ward as home it would probably be very traumatic to place him elsewhere," she said. Miss Cerminaro said the particularly disturbing thing about Jack was that when he was given psychological tests on entering the hospital he was deemed "bright, alert, warm, well-mannered and one who related well to others." Since then, she said, his condition has deteriorated considerably to a point where he is now considered severely retarded with an I.Q. of less than 50, and he is hyperactive. "His mother seldom visits him, and he thinks every female that enters the ward is his mother," Miss Cerminaro said. "Never Attended School" "He has never gone to school, and the children he comes in contact with are usually here for a few days or a few weeks," she added. "We recently got the mother's permission to find another institution for the child, but because of his deteriorating condition this will be difficult," Miss Cerminaro said. On official at the Bureau of Child Welfare, who asked anonymously, said that his agency had sought custody of the boy through Family Court on the ground of neglect but that the case had been thrown out because the judge—the third to be involved in the hearings—had felt the agencies had not worked closely enough with the mother. Temporary custody was granted to the bureau between April and October 1974, but it failed to find a facility that would accept the child. The official said part of the problem was a severe staff shortage. "Another problem is that our central office is used to dealing with clerical items and is out of touch with children with special needs," he said. Runaround Cited He said that this was indicative in the "runaround" the bureau's Brooklyn office got in requesting authorization to place the child in a special-care facility other than the 85 under-contract with the city, none of which would accept the boy. And then the referrals themselves take from two months to 18 months to be processed by the private agencies, with a fee of $200 per day or $73,000 per year," Miss Cerminaro said. The bills are paid for by Medicaid funds under a formula in which the city and the state each pay 25 percent and the Federal Government pays 50 percent. The cost of keeping such children at the most expensive schools for the mentally retarded or in foster homes is $6,000 to $7,000 a year, Miss Cerminaro said. "But you can't get rehabilitation hospitals to take them because the facilities fear that once their course of treatment is up there will be problems in placing the children elsewhere," she said.

ny Sues Hollander for Aid Fraud

HN L. HESS State has filed suit against Eugene Hollander for allegedly obtained $250,000 through fraud, violation and breach of contract. The suit was filed in State Supreme Court in Brooklyn, Mr. Hollander was put on probation and fined $10,000. Judge Jack B. Weinstein of the Federal District Court in Brooklyn ordered Mr. Hollander to spend five months in jail and six months in a house of correction in Brooklyn. The judge designated a prison for Mr. Hollander, but told the defendant: "These are findings, as dismal as some of the homes under is to appear at his sentence on the ground that filled the attached

Weinstein of the Federal District Court in Brooklyn ordered Mr. Hollander to spend five months in jail and six months in a house of correction in Brooklyn. $250,000 in May on his plea of guilty to stealing $1.2 million from Medicaid. He was given six months to pay. Meanwhile, a platoon of accountants from the State Health Department and the office of the special prosecutor for nursing homes was rushing to complete an audit of the four former Hollander nursing homes for the years 1968 through 1974. They reported overpayments totaling $7 million, based on techniques similar to those in the indictments: unexplained payments, personal expenses, multiple payments for the same service and contributions, all billed to Medicaid. At the request of the Health Department, the State Attorney General's office in Albany filed a civil action there on Tuesday to recover the money. A spokesman said that a process server had been denied entry to Mr. Hollander's Fifth Avenue apartment, and had left a subpoena with a doorman. At the Bryant Hotel, the process server waited until after 10 P. M. Tuesday but left after being told that Mr. Hollander would not be in until 11 P. M., the spokesman said. He was instructed to return last night. A staff member of the Bryant Hotel said yesterday that Mr. Hollander had been there only "a couple or three" nights in early May and had then been transferred to the nearby Woodward Hotel, at 55th Street and Broadway. The Federal correctional facility rents rooms in both hotels to house persons released from penitentiaries for a transitional period. The Woodward manager said Mr. Hollander had never been there. In the deserted office of the Federal correctional facility, the director, Matthew Walsh, declined to be interviewed. Telephoned later, he said Mr. Hollander had been assigned to a room on a floor of the Bryant that had its own surveillance office, and had signed in five nights a week either at 10 P. M. or at 11 P. M., as scheduled. Mr. Walsh declined to permit the log to be inspected. Two of Mr. Hollander's original four nursing homes have been closed and the two others rented to nonprofit institutions. Negotiations have been under way for months to rent two new but still unopened Hollander homes to similar institutions. If these negotiations succeed, he will collect $1.3 million a year, all told, in rent from Medicaid. Lawyers for Bernard Bergman, who was sentenced last Thursday to four months for Medicaid and tax fraud, asked Federal Judge Marvin E. Frankel to send him to the Bryant. The judge replied that the request was "reasonable," and invited the defense to file a motion to that effect if they considered it best for their client, but ordered him to the new Manhattan Correction Center, 150 Park Row. By all accounts, the latter center is more comfortable, though more formal, than the one at Bryant.

Painter Wins Million in Jersey Lottery A 55-year-old house painter who had been working part-time since undergoing open heart surgery four years ago won $1 million yesterday in the New Jersey lottery's millionaire drawing. The winner, Nicholas J. Albano of Ventnor, announced his retirement after his name was chosen at a drawing in Trenton at the State Museum. Mr. Albano said he hoped to use the winnings—$50,000 a year for 20 years—to buy a house and cars for his wife and himself and to provide for his daughter's college education. He has been living in an apartment since his operation because he could not make the mortgage payments. He won the top prize after buying only two weekly lottery tickets.

7,000 Evacuated in 44th-Floor Fire About 7,000 office workers were evacuated from the 50-story building at 11 New York Plaza on the East River near the Battery, when an electrical fire broke out on the 44th floor. The building was the scene of the city's first major skyscraper fire six years ago, which took two lives. The evacuation went smoothly and damage was slight, according to Bernard Hartman, executive manager of the building. Employees of several brokerage concerns and other tenant companies returned after 90 minutes. Power was knocked out in parts of the top eight floors for several hours.

Stenographer Arrested in Fraud Case A stenographer in the office of District Attorney Mario Merola of the Bronx has been arrested on welfare fraud charges by the District Attorney. Mr. Merola said the $7,225-a-year employee, Elise Glynn, 25 years old, of the Bronx, was found to have illegally drawn $3,220 in welfare benefits in a series of routine checks by the District Attorney's frauds bureau. Miss Glynn, who began her job for the District Attorney's appeals bureau on May 10, Mr. Merola said, had received welfare benefits since Oct. 24, 1974.

2 L.I. Youths Killed in Alpine Two Long Island teen-agers were killed yesterday when the seven-foot trench where they were setting pipes collapsed and buried them, the Alpine, N.J., police reported. The victims, Russell Gorman, 15, and Philip Schramberg, 16, both of Farmingville, were working at the time for the Gorman youth's father, Harry Gorman, a contractor on a new home development. Walter E. Dimick, the chief of police, said the trench was not reinforced at the time of the collapse. The senior Gorman was operating a trench digger at the time of the collapse, Chief Dimick said.

"If we can't clean up the park, and apparently we can't, then let's close it down," said William Stuhlbarg at an emergency meeting of city officials and businessmen and women who work near the park, which is west of the Avenue of the Americas between 40th and 42d Streets,

PRINCIPAL DRAWS A COURT PENALTY

To Be Confined for Resisting Ethnic Survey in School

By MAX H. SEIGEL

A Federal judge in Brooklyn sentenced a high-school principal yesterday to confinement for refusing to obey a court order to carry out an ethnic survey required by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The principal, Howard Hurwitz of Long Island City High School, was held in civil contempt by Judge Jack B. Weinstein. He is to be in custody for as long as he refuses to prepare the survey. "You will hold the key to the jail in your hands," Judge Weinstein told Dr. Hurwitz. "You can open the door at any time."

Four minutes after being placed in custody he was ordered released by Judge Weinstein pending application by his lawyer, Leonard Greenwald, for a stay. Last Wednesday the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit refused to hear the application because it was not submitted in writing. It is scheduled to be submitted tomorrow morning.

At the start of the principal's brief trial yesterday afternoon, Senator James L. Buckley entered the case as a friend of the court. Through his lawyer, Paul Windels Jr., he suggested that there be a factual inquiry into the survey before final action was taken, and that "the court grant individuals who felt as a matter of conscience that they could not comply without exhausting all remedies, that they be allowed to do so."

Five Days a Week If the defense appeals fail, Dr. Hurwitz will be required to remain in a community treatment center every day from 8 P. M. to 5 A. M. except Friday and Saturday. Obviously seeking to avoid imposing the sentence, Judge Weinstein had asked Dr. Hurwitz if he would agree to cooperate with the ethnic survey of his school on condition that the results remained sealed until all legal challenges were exhausted. "But the principal said he still would have to decline. 'I just can't do this,' he explained. 'I want to stand for something in my own mind.'"

"Under the circumstances," Judge Weinstein said, "you leave me no alternative. Call the marshals." Mr. Windels, intervening, asked if the court could extend itself and defer placing the principal in custody pending appeal. "I have no desire to punish such a distinguished and valuable member of the community," the judge replied. "In conducting an educational war, we can't afford to lose our generals."

Later, as he left the courtroom, Dr. Hurwitz said: "I am deeply grateful to Judge Weinstein for his compassion. He had his duty to do and I had mine." At the heart of the dispute is a survey that the Department of Health, Education and Welfare wants made to determine whether there has been discrimination in the administration of New York City school programs it has financed.

LOTTERY NUMBER June 23, 1976 N.J. Pick-It—848

The Statue of Liberty Tuesday night with new lighting. Exposure was 1/80 second at f4 with Tri-X at ASA 400.

Statue of Liberty Torch Is Shedding New Light

The torch of the Statue of Liberty will burst into brilliance on July 3, her crown will acquire jewels of dancing blue-green lights and her draped form and pedestal will glow with a new warmth—all thanks to a new lighting system. The system, designed to provide four times the illumination at one-third of the energy cost of the statue's present lighting, will be officially switched on by the National Park Service—just in time to shine a special greeting to the tall ships now headed for a Fourth of July rendezvous in New York Harbor. The batteries of new lights are a Bicentennial gift to the nation from the Crouse-Hinds Company, a Syracuse electrical concern that had expected to be paid for the project when it was first explored by the Park Service back in 1974. When the project didn't make its way into the Federal budget, Crouse-Hinds decided to donate the system and then accelerated the installation to be finished by the Fourth of July. According to the company, the new system utilizes low-energy technology and advanced lighting techniques not available when the present system was installed in 1931, replacing the original lights installed in 1916. High-pressure sodium lamps, rich in yellow, will simulate the flaming torch, mercury lamps within the crown will produce the blue-green jeweled effect, metal half lamps will illuminate the overall statue with strong white light and the granite pedestal will be highlighted by a blend of white halide and yellow sodium lighting.

Jovial New House Chairman

Frank Thompson Jr.

A politician of self-deprecating gregariousness (Representative Thompson in his Washington office)

WASHINGTON, June 23—Considering the acrimony surrounding the chairmanship of the House Administration Committee in the last month, it seemed almost fitting that the newly installed Representative Frank Thompson Jr. to head the group.

He has been the bitterest enemy of Representative Wayne L. Hays, who was ousted.

In the last few years the two Democrats, Mr. Thompson from New Jersey and Mr. Hays from Ohio, have fought early and often both in legislative sessions and in committee meetings. Both publicly and privately, the two men have heaped abuse on each other.

After today's balloting, in which the House formally installed Mr. Thompson as chairman of the Administration Committee by a vote of 295 to 4, with 107 members, mainly Republicans, voting "present," Mr. Thompson recalled his long standing feud with Mr. Hays.

"I found it difficult to get to see any of the committee's records except those dealing directly with the Accounts Subcommittee," Mr. Thompson said. "The staff was directed not to cooperate with me."

"In the last three or four weeks there have been some revelations that were amazing even to those of us who know something about the accounts system," he added.

Asked for an example, Mr. Thompson said he had been started to find "the omission of the names of staff members from monthly payroll records."

Changes Planned

Mr. Thompson promised that the committee's record keeping, the accessibility of the records in the press, and even the staff of the committee would quickly change.

The chairmanship might seem small potatoes to Mr. Thompson, who in the past has been routed for Governor, Senator and even Cabinet member in the Kennedy Administration, but he will wield great influence over the operations of the House.

This once-obscure committee, which Mr. Hays had managed to build into a base of power, controls tens of millions of dollars in administrative and expense funds for members, as well as the patronage of perhaps 5,000 Capitol Hill workers.

"I could never stand the way Hays treated the pages, the elevator operators, the blue-collar workers here," Mr. Thompson said. In contrast to the flamboyant Mr. Hays, who was dubbed "the Mayor of Capitol Hill," Mr. Thompson is a politician of wisecracking, self-deprecating gregariousness.

Supporter of Labor

Recalling today his race against Mr. Hays for the committee chairmanship in the Democratic caucus 18 months ago, when the New Jersey Democrat lost 161 to 111, Mr. Thompson said, "I think my teller couldn't count. In the last few days so many members said they voted for me that I should have won by 60 votes." The understatement contrasts sharply with Mr. Thompson's usually blunt manner.

As one of the strongest

HOUSE DEMOCRATS APPROVE REFORMS

others said that the consolidation of all bookkeeping accounts of an individual member into one master expense account would open the way to charges that a "slush fund had been created."

The anti-reform group, however, was slowly ground down by the leadership, although it won some of the votes to water down the reform by votes as narrow as 127 to 112.

Final approval of the package came on a voice vote at 10:05 P.M., with Representative Thomas F. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts, the majority leader, announcing that he would introduce tomorrow the first batch of remedial legislation for the approval of all the members.

Rejected Proposal

The only one of the 13 proposals made yesterday that was not approved had called for the investing in the Speaker of the House of the Democratic members of the House Administration Committee.

Many members felt that this would have given the Speaker too much power and Mr. O'Neill who is to succeed Speaker Carl Albert of Oklahoma next year, withdrew the proposal.

This proposal's original aim was to prevent the chairman of the Administration Committee, formerly Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, and its members from ever again gaining power over the other House members through oversight of their expenses.

Representatives from safe districts, including many from the South, repeatedly sought to prevent the reform proposals from even being discussed at this month's three-hour session, since their re-election prospects are unlikely to be changed whether or not the reforms were adopted.

The reform package stemmed from the fears of the Democratic leadership that the recent disclosure of Congressional abortions would dim the re-election prospects of many of the 75 younger Democratic Representatives elected less than two years ago.

The caucus action was a victory for the leadership after the most uproarious session on the House floor in at least a year.

This morning, for example, it took the Democratic leaders two hours to beat down procedural delays.

"Let's try to prevent obstructionism all along the line here and let's have some sympathy for some of the members who have tough fights for re-election," Mr. O'Neill pleaded.

Amid catcalls and boos from some members, he added, "I try to get elected from one-party districts—not like my district where you get elected if you have a 'D' beside your name." At one point, with the tumult rising around him, abetted by cries of "Adjourn! Adjourn!" Mr. O'Neill looked up to those observing a rare public session of the caucus and commented, "This is a good chance for the persons in the gallery to see real democracy and how it works."

After losing an earlier procedural vote, Mr. O'Neill and his allies overwhelmingly defeated an adjournment motion offered by Representative Olin E. Teague of Texas by a vote of 250 to 11, and discussion of the reform package started.

Mr. O'Neill conceded that earlier attempts by the Republicans to institute many of the reforms in the package had been correct.

"In retrospect we [the Democrats] were wrong in the eyes of the American people and in the eyes of the press," he said.

This led Representative Frank Annunzio of Illinois to state, in an impassioned speech, "Either we make the reforms or the Republicans will, and if they do a lot of people who are here this morning will not be back."

House Representative David R. Obey of Wisconsin, who directed a special three-member committee that drafted the reform proposals, pleaded that they were needed to clean up long-standing potentials for abuse.

"Got to Change System"

Mr. Obey said the provision that would forbid members to pocket as much as $11,000 a year in expenses "has deeply angered many members," more so than any of the other 12 proposals, but he added that "we've got to do it to remain credible."

"We can't tolerate a delay and be wallowing around in the accounts problem," Mr. Obey continued. "We've got to change the system and make it more accountable."

Mr. Obey was "hissed and booed at one point when he explained that one of the proposals would reduce travel allowances from the present 20 cents a mile to as low as 8 cents. Members receive such allowances when driving to their home districts.

After the morning caucus meeting, the House went into session and elected Representative Frank Thompson Jr. of New Jersey to replace Representative Hays as chairman of the Administration Committee. The vote was 295 to 4, with 107 members, mainly Republicans, voting "present." Mr. Hays was absent. He is recuperating in Ohio after having taken an overdose of sleeping pills two weeks ago.

The uproar over the payroll and expense accounts stemmed from charges initially brought by Elizabeth Ray that Mr. Hays had placed her on the committee staff at a salary of $14,000 a year for doing little but serve as his mistress. While conceding a liaison with Miss Ray, Mr. Hays has maintained that she did meaningful work for the committee.

Spur to Investigations

Miss Ray's charges have led to investigations by the Justice Department and the House ethics committee, several lawsuits demanding the return to the Federal Treasury of her paychecks, and demands for reforms within the House in this election year.

After becoming chairman this afternoon, Mr. Thompson said he would comply with requests by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in South D

MISSISSIPPI EASES FINANCIAL CURBS

Allows 8 Building and Loan Associations to Reopen

JACKSON, Miss., June 23 (AP)—Eight of the 34 savings and loan associations closed by the Mississippi Legislature have reopened.

The Legislature agreed Sunday to Gov. Cliff Finch's proposal that all state chartered savings and loans be closed until they could obtain Federal insurance or the state conservator allowed them to reopen.

The emergency measure was prompted by recent heavy deposit withdrawals from state-chartered savings and loans associations, including many described as sound.

Robert Warren, a retired Jackson banker who was appointed conservator over the state-chartered savings and loans institutions, said that he had approved the reopening of all eight associations he had studied in his first two days on the job.

"This doesn't mean these are the strongest associations," he said. "With a lot of them there just hasn't been time for them to come in and see me."

There are lots of fine, strong institutions whose reputations may have been damaged slightly, but are doing O.K. In time, a great many will be opened up.

Many associations have been under pressure since a run on the Bankers Trust Savings and Loan Association, in Jackson, a $236 million institution that is Mississippi's largest state-chartered savings and loan group. It is not connected with the Bankers Trust Company in New York.

It was a tremendous day by any standard at Wimbledon. As the mercury climbed, the queues formed. By 3 P.M., 200 people had fainted in the heat and been taken away by ambulances. By the day's end, 38,621 had jammed the grounds, the third biggest crowd ever, and the gates had to be closed.

Fittingly enough, one of Wimbledon's great champions provided the drama. On the No. 2 court, which was mobbed, John Newcombe trailed, two sets to one, and triumphed only because he knew how to win. He beat John Zverev, the British No. 7, by 6-3, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4 over three hours of stogging and after nearly four hours of doubles yesterday.

A's to Get Munson Injures Thigh Order to Use Stars As Yankees Lose, 4-1

By MURRAY CHASS

Charles O. Finley, owner of the Oakland A's who astounded and confounded the baseball world by selling three players for $3.5 million, will be ordered in the next day or so to use those players in the A's games.

Lee MacPhail, president of the American League, confirmed yesterday that such action was pending and could come today. The order will come from either commissioner Bowie Kuhn, who voided the sales, or MacPhail.

"We're not going to permit the players to be hung up in mothballs," MacPhail.

It also was learned that Pete Blue, one of the players involved, did sign a contract, as Finley had said, before his sale to the Yankees. It is conceivable, though, that the three-year contract for slightly less than $500,000 will not be approved.

Meanwhile, filing of court suits challenging the commissioner's action continued to be delayed. Neil Papiano, Finley's lawyer, still hasn't initiated the suit as expected in California, and the Yankees continue to put off the expected announcement of their plans even though they are said to have their legal papers all prepared and ready to go.

Advice of Counsel

Blue, Joe Rudi and Rollie Blue, Joe Rudi and Rollie the A's or anyone else since they were sold to the Yankees and Boston Red Sox on June 15. When Kuhn ordered Fingers haven't played for them to remain on the roster, Finley said he wouldn't let them play on advice of legal counsel.

Finley said if he used them and they were hurt and later were ruled to be the property of those other clubs, he would be liable for possibly tremendous damages. Furthermore, he argued, their presence in the Oakland lineup could compromise his court case.

However, if they are ordered by Kuhn or MacPhail to use the players, he no longer would be liable for injuries. He also would not be prejudicing his case because he would be using the players under protest.

MacPhail said that since it was Kuhn's decision in the first place that kept Blue, Fingers and Rudi as members of the A's, he should issue the orders for them to play. However, the league president said, if the commissioner doesn't take the action, he will.

"The order," MacPhail added, "depends on the kind of suit filed by the Oakland club and how long it might take for a determination to be made."

Just why the A's suit hasn't been filed isn't clear. Papiano apparently is trying to put together a massive case in support of the sales while also looking for a court that who could reach the plate with a throw good enough to get a runner. He is Elliott Maddox and in his first start since June 13, 1975. He threw out Charlie Spikes at the plate in the second inning.

If that had been another Yankee outfielder, Munson still would have been waiting for the ball when the muscular Spikes reached the plate and would not have endured the collision. But Spikes hit him and Munson rolled over on his back in agony, clutching his lower right thigh, which was bruised.

"He won't be able to play tomorrow," Martin said, downcast in his office while the rest of the clubhouse remained quiet. "We'll have to wait until tomorrow to find out if he'll be out after that."

The Yankees cannot afford to lose Munson. He is batting .312, has driven in 44 runs and is the man who makes the Yankees go—even though he is running second to Carlton Fisk of the Boston Red Sox in the All-Star voting.

Munson stayed in the game after he was hurt, catching for two more innings and then moving to right field for three innings when Maddox left the game. Munson finally left after the seventh.

"I wanted to keep Thurman's bat in the lineup," the manager explained, "but he couldn't throw anymore back there so what am I gonna do, have two guys hurting on me?"

That was Martin's angry reaction when he was asked why he took Maddox out after four innings. At first, he refused to answer the question. Then he relented and explained that he was going to take Maddox out anyway after another inning so he made the move one inning early.

Maddox, of course, has the surgical knee that is encased in a large brace. He is not ready to play nine innings.

Ken Holtzman pitched nine innings in his first Yankee appearance in New York. He really pitched two games—

Running Tide Is Victor in Sail

HAMILTON, Bermuda, June 23—Running Tide, a famous 60-foot sloop from Annapolis, Md., was declared the winner of the Bermuda ocean race today. Al Van Metre's black beauty had finished the 635-mile passage from Newport, R. I., yesterday at 1 P.M., and when handicaps were figured, he had posted the best corrected time, 86 hours.

Smaller yachts were crossing the finish line at St. David's all day long today but their handicap time had run out and no one could beat the Tide.

She is a 6-year-old vessel designed by Sparkman & Stephens and built to the old rating rule of the Cruising Club of America for Jakob Isbrandtsen, who sold her to Van Metre in 1972. Her victory in yachting's most prestigious ocean race was pleasing to the sport's conservative establishment on several counts.

The popular skipper, Van Metre, as one of their crowd, the boat is conventional and comfortable and it trounced the stripped modern racing machines such as Wilkiew, which had a poor race. A comparable victory in the Bermuda race was that of Nina in 1962, when she was 34 years old and the only schooner rig left in the fleet.

Running Tide won the Southern Ocean Racing Circuit once, took Class A in the 1970 Bermuda race and has a lot of other trophies for lesser events. Those who advocate abandoning the expensive 12-Meters for America's Cup racing point to Running Tide as a practical replacement.

Jets' Holtz Scores Points as Speaker

By GERALD ESKENAZI

Lou Holtz grasped the microphone firmly at the Huntington (L.I.) Rotary Club's weekly luncheon the other day, and for 30 minutes he attempted roles: a folksy Will Rogers, a spiritual Billy Sunday, a Las Vegas-witted Don Rickles.

And the Rotarians loved him. In fact, when Holtz came out while coffee was served at Linck's Log Cabin, there was not one tinkle of a cup during his exhortation to greatness, his calling on the Almighty, his self-deprecation.

Since Holtz took over as coach of the New York Jets last February, he has averaged a speech a week. Next week, for example, he will be at the Concord Hotel in upstate New York addressing pharmaceutical salesmen. He recently returned from a tour of Air Force coaching clinics in Germany and England.

"I talk about what I believe in. I talk to make a point," he explained. "At North Carolina State I made five speeches some weeks. I had 15 or 20 requests every week. I averaged 150 speeches a year. Here, I have returned down a lot."

But he was looking forward to the Rotary Club. He pulled out a folder that contained his speech. It was next to other speech folders labeled "Randolph-Macon" and "Washington Clinic."

"There's no such thing as magic," he told the 60 businessmen. He called for a volunteer out of the audience and gave him three ropes of equal size to hold. Then he

Mets Win on Homer in Ninth

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY
Special to The New York Times

ST. LOUIS, June 23—Jerry Grote broke an 0-for-23 batting slump with a ninth-inning home run tonight to give the Mets and Tom Seaver a 5-4 victory over the Cardinals at Busch Stadium.

The Mets had gotten four runs in the third inning off Pete Falcone, the St. Louis starter, to overcome a 3-0 disadvantage. Seaver had granted the Cardinals the first inning. The outburst equaled the Mets' total run production in their four previous games, all losses.

Before the Mets' outburst, Seaver showed some uncharacteristic weakness in the first inning. The right-hander, who had won his last two starts, got Bake McBride, the leadoff batter, came in on Hector Cruz's single to right. Mike Tyson popped out to end the inning and the Mets were behind, 3-0, a position that has occurred with frequency during the last six weeks.

Joe Frazier, the Mets manager, gave Mike Vail his first start of the season in right field. Vail, who hit .302 in his rookie season last year, dislocated his right foot playing basketball over the winter and is still not able to run full tilt. However, Frazier reasoned that any active bat could only benefit the lineup since the Mets had scored a total of 11 runs in their last eight games.

The Mets big third inning began with Del Unser's homer, a fly ball to right that traveled 360 feet into the

Did Bowie Exceed His Authority?

With a fanfare of nostalgia, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office will announce today the winners of its poll to determine the most memorable moments in baseball history. Too late to qualify for consideration was the most memorable moment in Bowie Kuhn's reign—his cancellation last week of the Finley Sales of Vida Blue, Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers for $3.5 million. Bowie Kuhn's decision was based on his jurisdiction over whatever he considers to be "not in the best interests of baseball." In taking the commissioner to court, Charles O. Finley will argue that he had the authority to sell those players. Other experts in baseball law believe that Charles O. Finley also will argue that Bowie Kuhn exceeded the authority vested in him by the major league agreement. Nowhere in that document is the commissioner's ruling listed explicitly among the penalties for a baseball scandal. Charles O. Finley would relish defeating Bowie Kuhn, a lawyer, on a point of law.

In the major league agreement, the function of the commissioner includes the authority to "investigate" whatever he considers to be not in the best interests of baseball but it adds, "and to impose such penalties as hereinafter provided."

The penalties mentioned are a) a reprimand; b) the deprivation of a major league club of representation in a joint meeting; c) the suspension or removal of any officer or employee of a major league club; d) the temporary or permanent ineligibility of a player; e) a fine, not to exceed $5,000 for an officer, employee or player of a major league team and not to exceed $500 for an officer, employee or player of a minor league team.

The Miller Suggestions

In his ruling, the commissioner imposed none of those penalties on the Oakland A's owner. The commissioner's view apparently is that no penalty is required beyond the cancellation of the deals. The view of Charles O. Finley presumably will be that if the deals were truly "not in the best interests of baseball," he deserved to be penalized; since he was not penalized, then the deals should not fall under the "not in the best interests" category.

Until a judge rules, the Finley Sales will continue to upstage the pennant races. They also will continue to affect the negotiations for a collective bargaining agreement between the clubowners and the players.

Among other things, the Finley Sales will prompt restrictions regarding the disposal of players exercising the option clause in order to become free agents for the following season. More than two months ago, after Reggie Jackson did not immediately report to the Baltimore Orioles after the A's had traded him, Marvin Miller, the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, proposed that an unsigned player be granted a veto power

People in Sports Ron Johnson Signs Pact With Cowboys

Ron Johnson, the only 1,000-yard rusher the New York Giants have ever had, has signed with the Dallas Cowboys. The 28-year-old running back, a seven-year pro who played out his option with the Giants last season and became a free agent May 1, signed two one-year contracts with Dallas, without a bonus and without a no-cut clause, according to the Cowboys. No other details of the contract were announced.

An all-American at Michigan, Johnson was the No. 1 draft choice of the Cleveland Browns in 1969. He was traded to the Giants in 1970 and gained 1,027 yards. He bettered that mark in 1972 with 1,182 yards rushing. In 1974, he had leg trouble and rushed for only 218 yards. Last season was an off year as he gained only 351 yards.

Curis Strang, a junior at Wake Forest who turned pro last week, was among four repeaters named to the 1976 All-American Collegiate Golf Team. It was the third straight time for Strang and for Keith Ferguson, a senior at Houston. Two seniors, Jay Young and Ralph Garza, of Ohio State, were named to the team for the second time. Picked for the first time were Scott Simpson, the National Collegiate champion from the University of Southern California, a junior, and three sophomores: Lindsey Miller of Oldham State, Mike Beaman of Brigham Young and Ralph Garza of Ohio State. They'll be honored July 13 at the 12th annual All-American Collegiate Golf Team dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Bobby Orr, the former star defenseman for the Boston Bruins, is scheduled to appear on stage at the Bismarck Theater in Chicago today to sign his $3-million contract with the Chicago Blackhawks. Alan Eagleson, Orr's adviser, disputed reports that the rate of $100,000 a year for 30 years and insisted it would be a flat payment divided by the number of years covered by the contract, said to be three or five.

violating kidnapping and conspiracy statutes. In addition a state grand jury in Ulster County, N.Y., where the alleged murder took place, has indicted Mr. Briguglio and Mr. Provenzano for murder and Mr. Provenzano for conspiracy to murder.

Mr. Castellito was said to have been slain in his home in Kerhonkson, N.Y.

William L. Aronwald, head of the Federal Strike Force Against Organized Crime, refused to discuss the motive for the killing of Mr. Castellito.

The break in the 15-year-old case came about two months ago when a Federal Bureau of Investigation field office outside the New York area received new information about the murder, according to sources close to the case.

The information was relayed to the New York and New Jersey offices of the F.B.I., which got in touch with Mr. Aronwald and the New York state police.

Witness Is Cooperating

Under the direction of Mr. Aronwald, evidence was collected to implicate Salvatore Sinno, an associate of Mr. Provenzano and Mr. Briguglio, the sources said.

The evidence was such that Mr. Sinno agreed to cooperate with the Government, and he is now under Federal protection.

The indictment yesterday named Mr. Sinno and Edward Skowron, who has since died, as co-conspirators, but not defendants, in the kidnapping of Mr. Castellito.

According to the indictment, Mr. Provenzano solicited the help of Mr. Briguglio and Mr. Konigsberg to murder Mr. Castellito, and he provided an office at the local headquarters in Union City, N.J., for Mr. Konigsberg to plan the killing.

A Trap Is Charged

Mr. Konigsberg took Mr. Sinno into the conspiracy to lure Mr. Castellito to his death, the indictment said. Mr. Sinno told Mr. Castellito that he had a friend, the late Mr. Skowron, who was a fugitive and wanted to hide in Mr. Castellito's summer home in Kerhonkson, N.Y.

Mr. Castellito agreed to help and took Mr. Skowron and Mr. Sinno to the house on June 5, 1961. Mr. Konigsberg and Mr. Briguglio were already there, according to the indictment, and they killed Mr. Castellito when he arrived at the house, first knocking him out and then strangling him with a rope.

Mr. Vangelakos, who had also been taken into the conspiracy, was nearby digging a grave at the time, but the men decided not to bury the body near the house but took it instead to New Jersey, the indictment said.

Mr. Castellito's body has not been found, but officials said it was not necessary to produce it to prosecute the cases against the defendants.

According to the indictment, Mr. Konigsberg was paid $15,000 for the killing and Mr. Briguglio was made business agent for the local as a reward. Mr. Provenzano, 59, and Mr. Briguglio, 46, were taken to Federal Court in Newark yesterday and held on $100,000 bail each. Mr. Vangelakos was held in $50,000. They were scheduled to be arraigned in New York next Thursday.

Present in court yesterday were Mr. Provenzano's brothers Salvatore, who is president of Local 560, and Nunzio, a business agent, and Stephen and Thomas Andretta, friends of Mr. Briguglio and Mr. Provenzano and teamster members.

A Federal informant, Ralph Picardo, has named Mr. Briguglio, his brother Salvatore and Thomas Andretta as having kidnapped and killed Mr. Hoffa last July 30. The three were taken before a Federal grand jury investigating Mr. Hoffa's disappearance, but none has been indicted in the case.

A Return to Power
Mr. Provenzano returned to a leadership position in Local 560 last year when he was elected secretary-treasurer. He had been barred from holding any office for five years after being paroled in 1970 from a prison term for extortion.

He had served seven years at the Federal prison in Lewisburg, Pa., where Mr. Hoffa was also held. Federal officials believe that the two had a falling out while in jail over a dispute about Mr. Provenzano's union pension rights.

The barrel-chested, tough-talking Mr. Provenzano grew up in Manhattan's Lower East Side and became a trucker's helper at the age of 15.

In 1950 he became an organizer of Local 560, which grew to the nation's third largest teamster local during the postwar trucking boom. Eight years later he ran successfully for president of the 13,000-member local, and in 1961 he became a vice president of the national teamsters' union.

Union sources said that Mr. Provenzano felt that Mr. Castellito had failed to push the Provenzano candidacy for president in 1959 and had secretly worked against him after he was elected.

Our Tool and Die Center will save millions of dollars for U.S. manufacturers in Puerto Rico

Graduates of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico's Tool and Die Center in Bayamón can match skills with industrial craftsmen anywhere in the world.

This new generation of local machine tool and die specialists will free companies in Puerto Rico from importing expensive dies and high-salaried workers from the U.S. mainland.

Read their story, then send the coupon below for more information.

PUERTO RICO has attracted hundreds of U.S. manufacturers with its unique offer of total exemption from U.S. Federal and local Commonwealth taxes. This guarantees that in Puerto Rico, the profit you make is the profit you keep—all of it.

No industrial location, of course, can guarantee that you will make a profit. That's largely a matter of how economically you can run your business. Puerto Rico's reasonable wages and high worker productivity will help. Another money saver is the ready availability of workers with key production skills.

To assure that manufacturers on the island won't have to import such skills from the U.S. mainland at top wages, the Commonwealth has established five technological institutes to train qualified applicants as tool and die makers, machinists, plumbers and electronics and refrigeration specialists.

In 1970, the Tool and Die Center was set up in Bayamón, just outside San Juan. The Center is completely equipped with the latest machines and staffed by professionals. Apprentices undergo 8,000 hours of training, the final 2,000 hours on the job in an established plant.

point where companies regularly assign us jobs fabricating machine parts which would cost them a fortune on the mainland. 99

Wally Gonzales is Director of Technical Drawing and Design. He has an associate degree in mechanical technology and ten years' working experience in industrial design.

Wally Gonzales

"Students here are a teacher's dream," says Gonzales, "serious, attentive and motivated to get ahead. Quite a contrast to the situation in vocational schools I attended on the mainland. Also much of our work here is on actual assignments from industry, which students find more challenging than bookends and other make-work projects."

"Much of our work here is on actual assignments from industry, which students find more challenging than bookends and other make-work projects."

"I think this involvement by industry has been the acid test. Of course, they save the expense of importing guys from the mainland at a minimum of eight dollars an hour to design and fabricate parts. But the fact remains that these companies wouldn't entrust such precision work to the Center if our people didn't turn out high quality work."

"But over and above all that, U.S. manufacturers here know that it's to their own ultimate benefit to do what they can to develop a class of homegrown tool and die makers and designers. The saving over the west has to add up to millions of dollars. 99

Julio Santos, 27, is a trainee in his final year at the Center. Julio has already been signed up by the Hudson Lock Co. to work in their Arecibo, Puerto Rico, plant after graduation.

Julio Santos

"I heard about the Center back in 1972," he recalls. "Till then I was sort of marking time—a two-year hitch in the Navy, then jobs here and there. But I saw the Center as a chance to become more than just a handyman. It was a crack at learning a trade."

"That's why Puerto Rico is such a great place for a school like this. "Down here, a trade is still the best way for an average guy to get ahead and make a decent life for his family. I guarantee you, if they opened another Center tomorrow, they could fill it up in no time at all."

"But that's the kind of confidence you get

"I've already built about 15 dies from scratch right here in this shop."

here. I feel I can tackle any job they hand me. Some companies down here, when it comes to needing new dies and machine parts, they still order them from the mainland. Well, it's their money, but I can't see why they would throw it away like that."

"I've already built about 15 dies from scratch right here in this shop. And for really first-class companies like General Electric."

"Now you take the Hudson Lock people. They have the right idea. They plan to send me to the mainland for a year to learn the ropes on their special equipment. Once I get back, that will be the end of importing expensive dies from up there. 99

Puerto Rico's Tool and Die Center is just one more way the Commonwealth government has responded to the needs of manufacturers on this U.S. island. Other cost-saving incentives include free worker training programs, excise tax exemptions on materials, machinery and equipment and a duty-free U.S. Foreign Trade Zone near the port of Mayaguez.

"I still think it's a misplaced priority," Miss Krupskak went on. "But architecturally, it's turning out to be a beautiful facility. I confess that one day last week I took a stroll through it myself. We have it—let's use it, not just as a government complex, but as a place for people."

Albany Mall Is Enjoyed By Friend and Foe Alike

mouse" and, at other points, the paintings by Clifford Still, Robert Motherwell and Helen Frankenthaler.

Asked how he was going to square his aesthetic enthusiasm with his longtime political opposition to the design—concrete and otherwise—of former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Mr. Bronston furrowed his brow and replied: "I've always been a fan of the Egyptian pyramids, but that doesn't mean I ascribe to the political views of Cheops."

Not everyone apparently shares the Senator's delicate sensibilities. A couple of weeks ago a passer-by winced visibly as some workmen in overalls putting up the paintings in the corridors simply leaned one huge canvas, still partly bundled in filthy wrapping paper, against the blue-and-purple surface of another painting by Mark Rothko.

An Unsigned Painting
A visitor further down the hall remarked that one of the other paintings was unsigned by its artist. "I don't blame him," said a bearded woman standing nearby.

To date, the Legislature has appropriated $50,341,514.84 to pay for the Mall, but Comptroller Arthur Levitt's office thinks that it will end up costing more like $1.2 billion. Financing charges—interest on the bonds issued by Albany County to pay for it—are likely to bring the total long-term cost to more than $2 billion, Mr. Levitt says. As almost everyone knows, the original construction cost estimates, back in 1967, was $400 million, and it was Mr. Levitt who warned—and warned and warned—that the estimates were low.

Only one of the 10 buildings—the giant bowl-shaped meeting center, which engineers refer to as "the egg," hasn't been finished, but officials say it will be ready for use next summer.

In the meantime, the state plans concerts, fireworks and various celebrations between July 1 and July 4 to salute the opening of the New York State Museum in the cultural education center at the southern end of the plaza.

Mixed Feelings

Aside from its reputation for vastness, the Mall is getting a reputation for vast inefficiency as well. Some of its buildings have only half their space available for offices—which means that, even though they are built to have offices for 11,200 workers, the state will still be renting another two million square feet of office space in privately owned buildings in Albany alone.

"I still grieve," said Lieut. Gov. Mary Ann Krupskak, as she looked out her third-floor office window providing probably the best view of the plaza in the Capitol. Outside, workmen were putting the finishing touches on the huge reflecting pools along the center of the mall.

"I still think it's a misplaced priority," Miss Krupskak went on. "But architecturally, it's turning out to be a beautiful facility. I confess that one day last week I took a stroll through it myself. We have it—let's use it, not just as a government complex, but as a place for people."

Mr. Harries testified that a bill giving the S.E.C. the right to order a higher rating on a municipal bond "would result in a rating that would have no credibility with the investing public and would be completely disregarded by investors."

Mr. Loomis testified that the bill would put the S.E.C. in the position of violating a 1933 law that makes it illegal for the commission to pass on the merits of any security up for sale.

Neither investors nor the business community should be led to believe that the commission, as an agency of the Government, approves or vouches for either the merits of a particular security or the work of any financial intermediary or advisor, Mr. Loomis said.

POORER NATIONS SEEK DEBT DELAY

Peru Is Latest of 3 Recently Seeking Postponement on Loans or More Credits

$400 MILLION LIMA GOAL Would Cover Short-Term Repayment Commitments on External Obligation

In recent weeks three developing nations have asked for a postponement of the payments due on their foreign debts or for more foreign credits to meet those payments.

The latest is the Government of Peru, which is trying to raise some $400 million from American banks to cover the short-term repayment commitments on its external debt, estimated at $3.7 billion, according to bankers in New York.

Peruvian banking sources have said this week that the Lima Government, if it failed to negotiate the new loans, might have to default and reschedule part of the debt.

The developments in the Peruvian debt negotiations follow a debt rescheduling by Zaire last week, when 11 major government creditors agreed in Paris to let the African nation postpone repayment of debt due in 1975 and 1976 for up to 10 years.

Argentina is also restructuring its foreign debt of nearly $10 billion. A government mission led by Economics Minister Jose Martinez de Hoz has been in New York City for several days seeking medium-term credits to meet its debt repayment obligations over the next two years.

A banker familiar with these negotiations estimates that Argentina will need to borrow more than $1 billion this year from American and foreign banks and the International Monetary Fund, and some $400 million next year.

According to statistics gathered by the Federal Reserve System, the 21 largest United States banks have $1 billion in loans outstanding to Peru, $1 billion to Argentina and $162 million to Zaire.

The increasing frequency of debt renegotiations seems to confirm the fears expressed earlier this year by bank analysts that a number of less-developed countries will be unable to meet the current payments on the record debts they have incurred in the last few years. The debt was run up largely to pay for more expensive imported oil, food and manufactured goods.

A growing proportion of this foreign debt is held by private banks in the industrialized nations.

Bache Chief May Relinquish Top Post

By ROBERT J. COLE John E. Leslie, chairman and chief executive officer of the Bache Group, corporate parent of the brokerage firm of Bache Halsey Stuart, disclosed yesterday that he was considering relinquishing his post as chief executive between now and the expiration of his contract in two and a half years.

John E. Leslie

Harry A. Jacobs Jr.

Mr. Leslie, who observed his 65th birthday last October, said in an interview that his "chosen successor" was Harry A. Jacobs Jr., president of Bache for the last eight years. Mr. Jacobs will be 55 on June 28.

Joined Bache in 1955 The disclosure of what Mr. Leslie termed "an orderly transition" came amid Wall Street reports after Mr. Leslie spoke informally before a dinner meeting of some Bache executives last week. Mr. Leslie is understood to have indicated that since that "in due course" Mr. Jacobs would be named chief executive but no specific time frame for the change was suggested.

Mr. Leslie joined Bache & Company, a predecessor organization, as a general partner in 1955. In 1969 he was elected board chairman and by the following year had been named to the additional post of chief executive.

His contract with the company provides for his employment through Dec. 31, 1978. "I plan to serve out my contractual time to the full end—Dec. 31, 1978. There's no question about it," he said. "I expect to continue through that period as chairman of the board."

He maintained that he would "try within that period to transfer some of my powers in an orderly way." He said he was referring to the transfer of the position as chief executive.

The Bache chief said that approximately $15 million

Insiders Buying Cook Industries Stock

By ROBERT MEIZ

If the executives of a major corporation purchase shares of the company's stock, it is reasonable to assume that better times are on the way for the company?

Executives of Cook Industries Inc. who have been buying the Memphis-based grain merchandiser's shares for weeks, say they don't know what is going to happen in the weeks ahead; they just think the shares are a good long-term investment.

Mr. Parrott bought 6,400 shares between May 12 and 28 at prices ranging from 15 1/2 to 17 1/4.

Personal Finance: Vacation Homes

By LEONARD SLOANE

For many, summer brings consideration of the advantages and disadvantages of renting or owning a vacation home.

make the decision to buy worthwhile. Take the case of a family that spends $1,800 a year to rent a summer- or winter-home. If the family could acquire a similar house for $17,000, with a $15,000 mortgage, here is the way the tax benefits would arise:

Some vacation-home owners, in addition to their own use, can obtain even further tax advantages by renting to others during part of the year.

For example, take the situation of a family that owns a seasonal home in an area where the vacation season is three months long.

Poor Nations Seek Debt Delay; Peru Sets Goal at $400 Million

The total external debt of the non-oil-producing developing countries is estimated at $130 billion, and according to statistics recently released by the subcommittee on multinational corporations or the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the largest American banks have $20 billion in loans outstanding to 18 of the major borrowers.

The loan repayment problem is especially acute this year, because many of the credits obtained in the heavy borrowing period of 1973-74 carried grace periods of two to three years, during which borrowers only had to pay interest. Now the principle as well is coming due, at a time when most poor countries are still not generating enough overseas earnings to pay for their import requirements.

Stockholdings Of Insiders

The American Stock Exchange yesterday issued its latest report on changes in stock ownership by leading stockholders, directors and officers of its listed companies.

INTERNATIONAL SYSTEMS and CONTROLS International Corporation, a large stockholder, bought 1,250 shares of ...

that this year the developing countries' total interest and amortization costs will amount to $11 billion, while their combined balance-of-payments deficit will be $28 to $30 billion.

Peru's situation appears particularly grave. The Andean nation expects a balance-of-payments deficit on current account of $1.3 billion this year, following a deficit of $1.6 billion in 1975. Monetary reserves at the end of April were down to $370 million versus $693 million at the end of 1974.

Last year Peru had to renegotiate its debt repayments and raise some $500 million in short-term credits with New York banks, which have known for a year that the country would come back this year for loans to cover their 1976 repayment commitments.

These negotiations, which involve the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, Citicorp, the Bank of America and almost every other major bank in New York City are still under way, and it is far from certain whether the Peruvians will obtain the funds they are seeking.

The Argentine mission has apparently been more successful. Mr. de Hoz said yesterday that the U.S. Export-Import Bank, which had cut off credits to Argentina under the former Peronist regime, may soon decide to lift its "guarantee" and that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Treasury Secretary William E. Simon had told him they were highly encouraged by the new Government's efforts to stabilize the nation's chaotic economy, a victim of triple-digit inflation for more than two years.

Broker Is Indicted In Massachusetts On Charge of Fraud

CLARENCE H. WAGNER, a former Massachusetts stockbroker, was indicted by a Federal grand jury in Boston yesterday on charges of defrauding investors of more than $1 million in 1971 and 1972.

The 31-count indictment accused Mr. Wagner, C. H. Wagner & Company (a brokerage firm he headed as president) and the Wagner Funding Corporation (a firm alleged to have dealt in securities without Government clearance) of committing mail fraud and falsifying information filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission dealing with net capital.

The criminal charges alleged that when the brokerage firm collapsed in early 1972 it had received more than $1 million in investor funds that were diverted to other uses. A receiver in bankruptcy was named for the firm in March 1972, court papers showed.

In an unrelated development, the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday suspended securities sales activities of the ISI Sales Corporation of San Francisco, now known as the Sage Financial Corporation, for 15 days.

The Government agency also suspended James M. Rinebner, past president and Theodore M. Neighbor, current president, from association with any investment company or adviser for 15 days.

It represented a 58.6 percent gain over the comparable period of the previous year, with sales rising 11.2 percent to $1.18 billion.

In fiscal 1975, Marcor net earnings increased 16.3 percent to a record $135.2 million while sales rose 3.3 percent to $4.8 billion, the company said. On March 12, the Marcor board said it had rejected a Mobil merger proposal that would have yielded about $35 a share for its common stockholders and twice that amount for holders of Marcor preferred. Soybeans a Focus Of Chicago Selling In Wake of Rains

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER. Rains over growing areas and some disappointment about the Agriculture Department's forecast of Soviet grain output led to a spate of selling on the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday.

Much of the selling was concentrated in the soybean complex. Soybeans dropped the daily 20-cent limit in all contracts. The August delivery ended at $6.39 1/4. Soybean meal dropped the $10-4-cent limit in most contracts, with the August delivery ending at $188.70 a ton.

Cocoa futures, which touched $1 a pound earlier in the week, moved above that level temporarily yesterday on the New York Cocoa Exchange, and then fell to close at 88.80 cents a pound.

logical imbalance, the poor countries have to buy or import technical expertise at a cost of several billion dollars a year in scarce foreign exchange.
 As early as 1964 the developing countries began to call attention to the technology issue, largely through a seemingly endless stream of studies and reports published by the United Nations Commission on Trade and Development, whose research has been consistently sympathetic to the position of the Group of 77.
 A year ago, what one observer called this "almost theological discussion" about the desirability of regulating the international trade in technology finally produced an outline for a legally binding code of conduct, followed last fall by a counterproposal by the Western industrialized countries for a nonbinding code. The two became the basis for discussion of the technology issue at the recent UNCTAD meeting in Nairobi, Kenya.

Advocates
 The less-developed countries say that they want to correct the imbalance in existing patent and investment law, which, as Prof. G. K. Helleiner of the University of Toronto wrote in a recent paper, "grant wide-ranging rights to the owners of intellectual property while imposing few developmental obligations upon them."
 Moreover, they assert that many of the changes they seek would simply prohibit the kind of monopolistic practices already outlawed within the industrial countries themselves.
 The specific reforms currently sought include:
 • A legally binding code of conduct to establish "fair" terms and prices for technology transfers, including more disclosure, guarantees that the technology supplied is "complete," limits on royalty payments to the parent company, and time limits on licensing agreements.
 • Inclusion in a code, or in a revision of the international patent system, of the principle of preferential treatment for developing countries. This could include, for example, concessional terms on imports for licensed production or preferential income tax treatment for technology suppliers to developing countries.
 • The outlawing of a number of "restrictive business practices," including the ability of transnational corporations to limit exports of products made under their license or to prevent imports of certain trademarked products, so-called "field-of-use" restriction by which technology suppliers authorize only limited applications of their technology; restrictions prohibiting the recipient from acquiring competing technologies; "tied" purchases of raw materials and "grant-back" clauses obliging the recipient to furnish the supplier with all future improvements that might be made in the technology.
 • More economic assistance for research and development within developing countries; more research on "appropriate" technology especially designed to meet the poor nations' needs; and more institutions to facilitate the exchange of technological information.

hibit their ability to attract foreign business with special investment incentives.
 It is also argued that the direct investment structure guarantees a greater degree of technology transfer. Jack N. Behrman of the University of North Carolina and Harvey Wallender of the Council of the Americas, a business group, maintain in a recent paper that wholly owned subsidiaries of multinational corporations enjoy more automatic and perhaps even cheaper access to technology than do licensees or arms-length purchasers of technology from the "shelf."
 "If host countries decided to take this system apart," Mr. Wallender says, "they'd have to create a government organization to put it all back together again, and it still wouldn't work as well."
 "What the developing countries forget," he asserts, "is that you can't decree technology transfer, you can only encourage it."
Outlook
 The United States Government is basically in sympathy with this view, and has therefore tried to shift the discussion of technology toward an emphasis on improving the investment climate for multinationals, and toward the development of more appropriate technology and managerial skills within the poor countries themselves.
 "We want to demythologize the idea that all you need is a blueprint and a fair price and you're off," said a high State Department official who asked not to be identified. "Countries have to have the capacity to manage technology."

In line with this position, the United States proposed at the Nairobi meeting such initiatives as international institutes to encourage research and development in appropriate technology and energy, and regional management training centers, proposals that were endorsed in UNCTAD's final resolution.
 The latter also noted that a group of experts would meet periodically to draft a technology code of conduct by the end of 1977, with some provisions of the code to be mandatory and others optional.
 But a number of participants at the UNCTAD meeting assert that progress on fundamental reform of the international legal system will be "very slow," not only because of opposition within the industrialized countries but also because privileged minorities within the developing countries themselves benefit from the status quo.
 Whatever change does occur, many observers agree, is likely to take place incrementally and unannounced, far from the noisy rhetorical debates. More and more individual countries will enact their own laws regulating technology transfers, and companies will increasingly experiment with "unpackaging" the sale of their capital, management and marketing skills, as well as technology.
 Increasingly, too, the developing nations will strive through regional groupings to strengthen their own technological capacity, to lessen their dependence on the industrialized nations, an effort that already has top priority

Critics of this sweeping agenda, including the multinational corporations and the governments of most industrialized countries, point out that the evidence on the incidence of restrictive practices in technology transfer is incomplete and inconclusive. More importantly, they contend that since most of the corporations controlling technology transfers consider the third world marginal to their operations, a network of restraints and regulations would simply drive companies away or, at best, cause them to raise the prices of technology even higher than they are today. What the developing countries are asking for, in other words, would in fact reduce the volume and increase the cost of technology transfers, the critics contend.

Simon Asserts Poland Will Get More Credits

William E. Simon, Secretary of Treasury, told Edward Gierak, the Polish leader, in Warsaw yesterday that the United States would give favorable consideration to Polish requests for more United States credits.
 The Treasury Secretary, on a tour of Communist-bloc nations said that the value of United States agricultural credits alone would "grow dramatically" to $150 million in 1976.
 Mr. Simon's visit was the first by a Treasury Secretary since before World War II. He told the Poles that both sides should attempt to whittle down the current lopsided situation in which the United States exports to Poland $320 million more than it imports in trade totaling $850 million.

among the largest oil exporters, nationalized its oil industry last January.
 General Alfonso Ravard said that although there were initial problems placing 2 million barrels of oil a day in the international market, the Venezuelan industry now has "adequate production levels, low inventories and satisfactory sales levels."
 The Venezuelan oil chief said that the state company planned to stress exploratory activities, which have practically ceased since nationalization.
 Frank Zarb, head of the Federal Energy Administration, said in Tokyo yesterday that the oil-importing nations must prepare for the possibility of another embargo on supplies.
 Mr. Zarb, en route home from a trip to the Middle East, said that he had heard no assurances from the producing nations that oil would not be used again as a political weapon. He urged importers such as Japan to recognize the danger increase oil stockpiles and add to their self-sufficiency in energy.
 He said that the long-term trend of oil prices could only be up. He noted, however, that in the Middle East he had found an understanding that sharply higher oil prices could jeopardize world economic recovery.

Continuous-cast rod (5/16" diameter) is shipped from the refinery in coils of 5,000 pounds and larger. Annual capacity is 120,000 tons.

Our new Amarillo copper refinery has a lot going for you.

Asarco's new copper refinery in Amarillo, Texas, is now on stream with the capability to produce 420,000 tons per year. It can also recover a wealth of byproducts: 60 million ounces of silver per year, gold, platinum, palladium, nickel salts, selenium and tellurium.
 It's the most modern and one of the largest copper refineries in the world. This new facility also includes a casting plant to produce wirebar and semi-continuous-cast cake and billets, and a rod mill to produce copper rod in continuous lengths. Antipollution systems were built in from the ground up. Output per man hour in this automated plant is more than double that of Asarco's outdated refineries recently closed down in Baltimore and Perth Amboy.

 The 250 acre Amarillo site—strategically located between the mines in the West and industrial markets in the Midwest, East and South—allowed the plant to be designed for maximum efficiency, with no compromises for topography, space or existing buildings. As a result, optimum materials handling has been incorporated into the refinery. This is another example of how Asarco is building for the future. Headquarters are at 120 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10005.

Sony Earnings Climb 112% As Exports to U.S. Grow

By CLARE M. RECKERT

Reflecting in part the huge increase in Japanese exports to the United States, the Sony Corporation reported yesterday increases of 112 percent in net income for its fiscal second quarter, ended April 30, and 52 percent for the half-year period.

The producers of a wide variety of consumer electronic equipment, notably color television sets, showed a record consolidated net income for the second quarter of $23.3 million, equal to 12 cents on each American depositary share. This compares with $11.9 million, or 6 cents a share for the quarter to April 30, 1975.

For the half-year, the consolidated net income, also at a new high, was $40.1 million, or 23 cents per ADS, compared with $32 million, or 15 cents a share for the similar six months a year earlier.

Second-quarter net income was increased by $2 million and the six months net increased by $2.6 million as a result of currency translation. For the 1975 periods the gains were $1.7 million and $2.3 million, respectively.

The company's sales outside Japan rose 23.7 percent in the quarter to $193.6 million from $156.5 million a year ago, while its domestic volume gained 12.3 percent to $161.8 million.

After giving effect to a $32.5 million tax credit and before the extraordinary gain, the net loss was $35.5 million, compared with a $51.1 million deficit after a $4.7 million tax credit in the five months last year.

Pan Am World Airways

Benefiting from the gains made from its exchange of debentures, Pan American World Airways reported yesterday its first net income since last year's third quarter, although it continued to show an operating loss in May and the first five months this year.

The airline has exchanged its new convertible subordinated debentures due in 1996 and 1999 for those due 10 years earlier. The exchange offer has been extended to July 2 on only the 4 1/2 percent debentures, not the 5 1/4's, the company said.

An extraordinary gain of $49.9 million after taxes from the debenture exchange plus an income tax credit of $32.5 million brought the net income for May to $76.1 million, equal to $1.80 a share. Before the debenture gain, however, the airline lost $3 million after allowing for a $3.3 million tax credit.

The May net income also included a $1.5 million gain on the sale of surplus equipment. In May, last year the net loss was $10.8 million including $1.9 million gain from a similar sale, but there was no tax credit.

For the first five months the net income including the gain of $49.9 million from the debenture exchange was $14.4 million, or 34 cents a share.

Business Briefs

Mutual Fund Redemptions Decline

Redemptions of mutual fund shares declined to $589.3 million last month from April's $620.3 million, the Investment Company Institute announced yesterday. The year-earlier total, in May 1975, was $323.1 million.

Sales of mutual fund shares in May were $240.6 million, below April's $305 million and higher than the $238.1 million of May 1975.

Net redemptions last month amounted to $348.7 million, compared with $315.3 million in April and $85 million in May of last year.

Fed Plans to Help Rural Banks

WASHINGTON, June 23—The Federal Reserve Board proposed today to liberalize in several ways the ability of smaller banks, mainly rural institutions, to use the Federal Reserve's "seasonal borrowing privilege."

The privilege gives banks that have seasonal demand for loans a virtually automatic access to the Federal Reserve's discount window—that is, the right to borrow from the Fed. The chief change in the proposed regulation would permit for the first time seasonal borrowing by banks that "maintain a portion of their liquid assets in the form of Federal funds, so long as such holdings conform to the bank's normal operating experience."

Pennsylvania and VW Near Accord

The agreement between Pennsylvania and Volkswagenwerk, the West German auto manufacturer, on an automobile assembly plant near Pittsburgh is expected to be completed by July 5, David Brown, special assistant to Gov. Milton J. Shapp, said yesterday.

Volkswagen had set a deadline of June 20 for completing the deal, but Mr. Brown said that the initial exchange of correspondence required by that date had been accomplished and that technical details were being worked out in compliance with the original schedule.

Dollar and Gold Dip in Europe

BRUSSELS, June 23 (UPI)—The dollar had slight losses on European money markets today, in what dealers attributed to usual midweek fluctuations.

The price of gold dipped 50 cents in London and Zurich to a four-week low of $124.875 and $124.75, respectively. The British pound closed for the second consecutive day at $1.725 in generally quiet trading conditions.

"I believe in a gradual and sound transition while I'm around," he said. "It's common sense. But the details have not been determined at this time." He suggested the possibility, however, that some changes might come just before the company's annual stockholder meeting next fall. He said he would be guided by the "final" decision at the firm, in the industry and the general economic and political state of the union.

In The Home you'll meet the New York Times Magazine audience... some 4,000,000 readers coast to coast.

As trend-setting, big-spending prospects, they have both the time and money to invest in their homes.

In fact, The Home goes to more readers with household incomes of $25,000+ and more readers owning homes valued at $40,000+ than House & Garden, House Beautiful or The New Yorker.

These affluent readers actively shop The Home every year for news and advertising of the most up-to-date decorating ideas and for their home furnishings purchases.

You'll sell key retailers in The Home as well. Some 70 percent of executives in department stores across the country read the Sunday Times regularly... as do interior designers and those in allied segments of the trade.

Also, The Home will be sent directly to 13,000 department store and furniture store executives, merchandise managers, store interior designers and m.c. building showcase that efficiently moves into the most productive market. Plan to be part of it.

Sale of W. T. Grant's Stake In Canada Chain Approved

Judge John J. Galgay of the Federal Bankruptcy Court approved yesterday the sale of the W. T. Grant Company's controlling interest in Zeller's Ltd., a Canadian retail chain, for $32.7 million to Field's Stores Ltd., a Vancouver retailer.

The decision ended a hearing at which another Canadian retailer, McLeod-Stedman, sought an adjournment to seek Canadian Government approval of its proposed $35 million offer.

Reynolds Patents Use Of Cereals in Tobacco

WASHINGTON, June 23—The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company received five patents yesterday covering the use of five different cereal grains as tobacco extenders. Under the patents, the grains may be mixed with cigarette or pipe tobacco or used as substitutes.

The company, based in Winston-Salem, N.C., has no plans to market the extenders, but a spokesman said the use of cereals potentially offered reduced tar and nicotine, without reducing the tobacco flavor or satisfaction in the smoker.

The patent numbers are 3,964,494 through 3,964,498. The materials are puffed and shredded corn, rice, wheat, millet and milo (grain sorghum). The company plans further studies and evaluation before deciding on commercial use.

Reviewing Candidate TV Costs

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

When it gets the time, Jimmy Carter's advertising agency plans to go back its records to see what it has paid for commercial broadcast time in 38 states and perhaps ask the Federal Communications Commission for an audit of the logs of some stations.

"In some areas we felt we were being fooled around with," Charlene Carl, media director of Gerald Rafternoon Advertising, Atlanta, said yesterday.

At issue is the question as to whether stations pushed up their rates 45 days in advance of primaries because of the F.C.C. regulation that candidates be charged the lowest rate charged any advertiser for that period before a primary. This course would violate the spirit and intent of the regulation.

"It's very difficult to determine if a station is doing that," Miss Carl said, "but I do feel that in many cases this was done."

Not all of the people in positions similar to Miss Carl feels as she does. However, her sentiments do get support from Gene DeWitt, executive vice president of Rosenfeld, Sirowitz & Lawson, who on his own time and with permission of management, has done some work for a North Carolina politician.

He cites one station that lacked up prime time unit costs from $600 to $900 as the 45-day pre-primary period started. And, he too plans to do something about it. When he gets the time, he said, he is going to check the stations logs preparatory to going to the F.C.C.

Not in agreement is Walter E. Staab, president of the SFM Media Service Corporation, which is buying commercial time for President Ford. Having checked with various groups of his people, he said, "Contrary to what I suspected, we don't think this is a problem."

He makes the point that rates have been climbing all year even without the candidates.

Bill Ham, media director of Sonder, Levitt, Sagorsky, Philadelphia, which worked for Milton Schapp in Pennsylvania, and Hope Martinez, who is working for Senator John V. Tunney in California, would agree with him.

Mr. Staab, however, believes that the second and third ranking radio stations in many markets "made a killing" especially with those spots that didn't include the candidates' voice. Only those with the voice are covered by the F.C.C. regulation.

Those regulations set a longer period of price protection for politicians before the general election — 60 days. TV prices are already so high toward the end of the year even those who are suspicious of stations wouldn't think they'd try to put rates any higher.

There is some concern about the time available for political announcements. The F.C.C. only requires "reasonable access" for candidates in a Federal election, which stations can read differently from agencies for candidates.

Miss Carl of Gerald Rafternoon Advertising, for example, believes that it should be 12 to 15 spots a week including two in prime time, while a station might main-

Bic Gets Head Start On Back-to-School Ads

Most schools aren't even out yet and already the Bic Pen Corporation is talking about back-to-school promotions. What a bunch of spoil sports.

You'll have to forgive them though, they think they've got big news. Having made the corporate decision that women are the primary audience for back-to-school advertising, Bic is going to use women's magazine for the first time.

Family Circle, Women's Day, Good Housekeeping, Ladies' Home Journal, McCall's and Seventeen will all carry the Wells, Rich, Green ad in their August issues and just to show it's not completely sexist, Bic will also slip a page into Boy's Life and a spread into TV Guide.

At least the ad has the proper tone with its headline, "Save on America's most popular pens. At America's most unpopular time of the year. And the art work shows grumpy kids.

tain that six a week with no prime time is reasonable. That's the sort of difference of opinion that could get her to call the F.C.C. She's done it before.

In preparation for the Florida primary, she said she was trying to buy time for a two-minute spot for Jimmy Carter. Two jointly-owned stations that had cancelled all of their two-minute record album commercials 45 days prior to the primary refused to take them. Miss Carl complained to the F.C.C. and got her way.

So much for smoke-filled rooms.

R.E.D. & O.'s New Campaign

There is a school of advertising that could well be called the ingratiating school. The way it works is that the advertiser doesn't promote himself or his products, merely supports a point of view that will convince customers that the sponsor is a right-thinker and worthy of support.

Whether this is the thinking behind a new campaign by Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn for the Hammermill Paper Company is their secret. But the ingredients are there.

Hammermill is supporting corporate profits. Each ad in the campaign will focus in on a different corporation (such as Du Pont, RCA and Union Carbide) to show how their profits helped them do something nice for individual consumers. The theme line will be "Profits make good things happen."

The $500,000 campaign will begin to run next month in Time, U.S. News & World Report and the Executive Edition of Newsweek. Even without referring to research, you can see that the advertising isn't aimed at people who don't believe in profits, but those who do.

Summark Holds Its Own

The Summark Companies, which bills itself as "innovators in enjoyment foods," had an innovative press gathering yesterday at which it really didn't have anything new to report.

Mainly, said Edward M. Clark, general manager of Sunfield Foods, a subsidiary, it was intended to let the press corps know that Summark, a comparatively small company, is not only surviving but also thriving in competition with such big boys as General Mills and Carnation.

Last February Summark brought out Crunchola, a chocolate-covered, peanut butter and granola snack bar in three varieties, which soon found itself on the supermarket shelves next to General Mills' Breakfast Squares. Before long there was an additional G.M. entry, Nature Valley Bars and from Carnation, Breakfast Bars.

Sales Area Marketing Inc., a Time Inc. subsidiary that monitors supermarket warehouse withdrawals, puts them all in a category called solid instant breakfast. Before the introduction of Crunchola, G.M.'s Breakfast Squares had 97.3 percent of the market (now put at $92 million at retail). Now it has 13 percent, he said. However, General Mills' Nature Valley Bar has a 40 percent share.

Crunchola, Mr. Clark said, has 20.8 percent, which he considers as pretty good.

His agency is Doyle Dane Bernbach and during the first half of this year the product was backed by some $2 million worth of advertising on 97 spot TV stations and in Sunday newspaper supplement ads, which carried cents-off coupons. During the same period General Mills spent $4.5 million. That's the crunch.

Accounts Harpers Bazaar to KSW&G Inc. Bankers Trust to Lord, Geller, Federico Inc. for their upstate New York banks.

People W. Kenn Thies has been appointed vice president-marketing, Oppenheimer Management Corporation.

of the nine regions of the country and declined in four. The largest percentage gain of 7.1 percent was recorded in the Mountain region, which includes the cities of Denver, Phoenix and Salt Lake City. The greatest percentage loss, 4.7 percent, was recorded in the South Atlantic region, which includes Atlanta, Baltimore, Miami and Washington. In New York the index remained unchanged from April but showed a gain of 3 points over the level of May, 1975.

Some of these people read
 The Washington Post or Town & Country or The Wall Street Journal or Sports Illustrated or Harper's Bazaar or Variety or Women's Wear Daily or Rolling Stone.

But they all read House Beautiful

"Making a house a home is instinctively American and provides our family with a happy base. House Beautiful is my private guide for making it all come together."
 Happy Rockefeller

"My children say that when I read House Beautiful the Executive Mansion in Albany becomes a more beautiful house."
 Governor Hugh L. Carey

"House Beautiful reminded me that I actually had a house during the campaign. Afterwards? It will help me organize it."
 Nancy Reagan

"I never miss House Beautiful. I must say last month's of a nude garage was so..."
 Edsel Ford

"Important to me: Amanda, my daughter; a man if he comes along; rooms with views; friends; nature; animals; my work... and House Beautiful."
 Tammy Grimes

"I'm a better museumkeeper because I read House Beautiful."
 Thomas Hoving

"I read House Beautiful because when Arnie and Jack drop in unexpectedly for dinner I want my home to be a U.S. Open house."
 Johnny Miller

"When Cynthia and I moved from Michigan to California House Beautiful made it don't ask me why..."
 Edsel Ford

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. The magazine for people who are interested in a lot more than just a beautiful house.
